THE LOWELL LEDGER

FIFTY-THIRD YEAR | LOWELL, MICHIGAN, SEPTEMBER 20, 1945 | NUMBER 20

LEDGER ENTRIES

MORE MARRIAGES

IN JUNE of this year 55,287 marriage licenses were issued in cities of 100,000 population, while only 52,154 were issued in June 1944. Thus plenty of people are entering the wedded state, in spite of uncertainties created by war. The youg people of America still have faith in their future, and are setting sail on the sea of matrimony with cheerful hearts and anticipations of happiness. The country wishes these people thus entering matrimony all success.

PLAYING AT ADULT WORK

MANY OF THE plays enjoyed by children consist of imitatations of the labors of the grown-ups. The boys sees people building houses, and he is moved to play with building blocks. He sees men digging in the streets, and so he is happy digging with his little shovel in the sand pile. The girl sees the women caring for their babies, so she is very happy as she dresses and undresses her doll.

Thus the little ones look into the dim future, and dream that they too are grown-up, and are taking their share of the work of the world. It is a healthful sign, and an indication that the energy with which they play their games will later be seen in earnest effort for the serious work of life.

EDUCATION MEANS WORK

THE AMERICAN people spend a heap of money to educate their children. The question whether a young person gets the benefit of what is offered him depends in large measure on whether he is willing to work and learn the lessons that are given him. If he is indolent about such work, or so engrossed with his personal activities that he gives his lessons little thought and study, the large amounts spent to educate him will be only partly successful.

"You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink," is the old saying. So you can lead a youth up to a school or college and offer him the wonderful benefits to be obtained there, but he has to put real effort into his study if he is to get the results expected.

INQUIRING MINDS

THERE ARE PLENTY of good talkers, people who can talk in an interesting and intelligent way. Perhaps there are not so many who have an inquiring mind, a constant eagerness to get facts and new ideas, and learn more about the world. These people who like to know about everything and make themselves well informed, have a great deal of influence and are capable of taking responsible positions.

Parents should not be troubled if they have a youngster who asks all sorts of questions. Some of them may be annoyed if they take the child on a railroad journey and he asks many questions in a loud voice. He may want to know what that locomotive is doing, and what is the use of those rails piled up in a heap, and why some railroad car is standing still. The child may be hushed up by his parents, but he shows some very good traits which can be encouraged.

Some parents may be annoyed because the children at home want the meaning of this or that thing the old folks are saying to be thoroughly explained. It may seem a task for these parents to stop their important talk, and go back to first principle and make it clear to the youthful mind what they mean. That child is learning and has a desire for knowledge, and that desire is a good one.

Youngsters of that type should do well in school, because they are so eager to learn. Their desire to learn will be welcomed and every new lesson will seem like some new opportunity to satisfy their eager minds. They will come through their courses with a fine record.

After they get out into the world their eagerness for knowledge will make them dissatisfied to go along in a routine way, but they will want to know more about their work, which will make them specially efficient and valuable. When there is a chance for promotion, the man or the woman with the inquiring mind is likely to get it.

Football Season Opens Fri. Night

Wyoming Park to Play at Recreation Park at Seven-Thirty

Lowell will pry the lid off its Grand Valley grid schedule, Friday nights under the arcs of Recreation Park at 7:30.

Wyoming Park will furnish the local lads with plenty of opposition, as rumors orginating in the Wyoming camp are that they would like to gain revenge and reverse the decision Lowell handed them in the opening game of last season's play.

Very little is known of the comparative strength of the two teams as this will be the opening game for the suburbanites as well as Lowell.

A squad of fifty boys were issued equipment by coach Burch. Among these were seven leitermen and a sprinkling of boys who saw limited action last year. Indications are that Bishop, McCormick, Eickhoff and Bob Kyser will see action in the backfield while D. Roth, Doyle, Johnson, Snyder and Zwiers will operate in the line.

Coach Burch must dig up a couple of guards and some backfield replacements from a group of lads who have yet to demonstrate their ability under fire.

To date the squad seems to be working hard, and the morale appears good. Competition this year seems to be unusually keen which promises plenty of action..

Mr. Jessup will without doubt present his marching band which already has shown at Rockford for their gala demonstration for their returned hero.

Lowell fans are urged to turn out Friday night and welcome the L. H. S. 1945 edition of football and band.

The 1945 Wheat Purchase Program

Farmers taking advantage of the 1945 Wheat Purchase program by putting their wheat under Commodity Credit Corporation loan will have the option of selling their wheat next spring to the Production and Marketing Administration at 15 cents a bushel above the applicable loan value, less charges. According to John McCabe, Chairman of the Kent County AAA Committe, the 1945 loan rate for Kent county is $1.47 per bushel. This Purchase Program is applicable to both farm-stored and approved warehouse-stored wheat and offers farmers the full parity price for the 1945 crop loan wheat.

The Chairman of the Kent County AAA Committee urges Kent county wheat producers who are interested in making application for wheat loans under Commodity Credit Corporation to contact the County AAA office located at 207 Spencer St., N. E., Grand Rapids 5, Mich., or telephone 73623.

Use Care To Hold Vegetable Vitamins Says Miss Hershey

Every victory gardener has a precious store of vitamins. Whether all those vitamins reach the family table depends upon how and when vegetables are prepared according to Roberta Hershey, extension specialist in foods and nutrition at Michgan State College.

After the daily harvest of victory garden crops, Miss Hershey stresses immediate care of green vegetables in order to retain their maximum food value. Salad greens should be washed right away and placed in a covered dish in the refrigerator. If either the refrigerator or refrigerator space is lacking, wrap greens in a damp towel and several layers of paper and place in the coolest spot possible.

In washing and storing vegetables, remember that the leaves of broccoli are higher in vitamin and mineral content than the flower heads and stems. Using the green outer leaves of cauliflower will make the otherwise all-white vegetable dish more attractive.

When to cook fresh garden vegetables is as important as how to cook them. Fall spinach growers, for instant, will get best results if they eat their crop as soon as it's harvested since spinach loses half its vitamin C in 24 hours. Speed in serving goes for all garden crops.

Cooking vegetables to retain vitamins means ignoring the common theory that vegetables should be started in cold water. All vegetables should be dropped into boiling water. Then bring the water back to boiling temperature as quickly as possible. Quick cooking periods insure more vitamins and fewer sodden vegetable dishes.

Another cooking tip concerns the use of soda. Often homemakers use soda to keep green vegetables from turning and unappetizing grayish brown, but soda is the arch-enemy of vitamins. Instead, cook them for the first few minutes with the cover of the kettle off, or at least tipped to let out the steam.

To get the last vitamin from every vegetable, Miss Hershey suggested using as little water as possible in cooking. The water left after the cooking can then be used in soups, gravies, cream sauces or cold vegetable juice cocktails to utilize the vitamins. It's a health-paying proposition since 60 percent of the vitamin often goes into the cooking water.

Lowell Sailor in Leyte Bay Fight

Robert Kropf Knows What It's Like to Battle Suicide Planes

Mr. and Mrs. Delbert Kropf received the following letter from their son, Robert A. Kropf, C. M. 3/c, the first letter they have received since the censoring of letters has come to an end:

Dear Mom and Dad: How are you? I am fine and hope the same for you. Well folks, the censoring is over, so I can tell you just where I have been.

To start with, I left the States September 28, 1944. After 18 days at sea we landed in Milling Bay, New Guinea. Three days later we were transferred to Halandra, New Guinea, and I was in receiving center from then until we arrived in Leyte November 24th.

We left New Guinea in a convoy of L. C. I's. At that time the big naval battle was on in Leyte Bay. The night before we reached Leyte Bay two Jap Zeros came in out of the sun about 6:30. One Zero was heading straight for us on the port side. The gunners opened up on him and he turned and went straight away behind us. There was a destroyer, I guess he didn't see in time. The Zero was just skimming the water and had to go directly over the destroyer. Well, to make the story short, they knocked him down. By this time the other Zero left. We thought they would be back, but I guess they had had enough, anyway they didn't show up. Maybe you don't think I was scared. It was the first action I had seen and I don't believe I'll ever be as scared again in all my life.

The Leyte Battle

The next morning we were in Leyte Bay. We had continuous air attacks from then on until New Years. They took us to P. I. Base 5 and dropped us off at night with no one in charge. It was raining and the mud was knee deep. An officer from the "Oyster Boy," a P. T. tender, found us and took us aboard his ship for a couple of days. There we had our first decent meal since we left New Guinea.

That was Saturday night and on Sunday morning all hell cut loose. The "Ponis," another P. T. tender, was anchored just off our bow. Three Zeros came over and one after the other tried to suicide dive into us. We knocked all three down, but they came to close for comfort. One was coming in on our starbard side about midship. Every gun on the ship was firing. Just in time some one must have hit the pilot, because he swooped up so that all he hit was our radio aerial. He tore that down and hit the water on our port side about 30 feet from us. We all hit the deck fast. When he hit the water there were pieces from the size of tubs to safety pins flying all over. A few fellows got hit. I didn't, I guess I was lucky because it spattered all around me. The fellows below heard the explosion of the plane when it hit the water and thought we had been hit.

We Huddled in Foxholes

The next day we were put ashore again on Base 5. It was just as wet and muddy as ever and we were soaking wet day and night. We couldn't find a tent so my Buddy and I got a tarpaulin and put it over what was left of a Philippino hut. All that was left was the four corner posts and a bambo floor about three feet from the ground. To add to the wetness the tide came in under us.

Christmas night we had our last bad air attack. We had four tents on our island then. This was F. E. M. U. Base and P. T. Base 5 was just 300 yards acros the water from us. All we had to fight with was four machine guns (one for each tent; two fellows had Carbines and I had my Springfield rifle. The Japs bombed the P. T. Base and air strip for six hours and for six hours we huddled in foxholes and under tents to keep away from the shrapnel. That was our last bad air attack. We had several little ones until New Year's, but since then, except for the mud or dust (it's either one or the other) and 147° heat, we are okay. Well I better close for this time, I'll tell you more later on. Tell everyone hello for me and write soon. Love, Bob.

5,000 EXPECTED AT MSC

Indications are that as many as 5,000 civilian students—3,500 women and 1,500 men—will be enrolled at Michigan State College for the fall quarter, according to Registrar Robert S. Linton. This would be a 31 percent increase over last fall's enrollment. Classes begin on Monday, September 24. In addition to the regular student body, more than 300 17-year-old youths are receiving instruction on the MSC campus under the Army Specialized Training Program.

Pilot Owes Much To Sympathetic Doctor

Lt. Allan J. Wisner

Although Lt. Allan J. Wisner, a graduate of Lowell High School in 1937, a P-38 pilot, was shot down in combat June 26, 1944 and not liberated until April, 1945, thanks to a sympathetic Slovakian doctor and the Underground, he never saw the inside of a German prisoner of war camp.

Flying bomber escort to Vienna, an attacking German fighter exploded his oxygen system, burning him around the eyes and shoulders and forcing him to bail out.

"I came down in Slovakia," said the pilot, who is now at AAF Redistribution Station No. 1 in Atlantic City, N. J., reported, "and was immediately put in a hospital there. The Germans hadn't reached there yet, but ten weeks later, when they showed up, a doctor in the hospital had me spirited away to a small hospital near the Moravian border."

Later on, as German troops began to get near again, the Underground took him to a hideout in the Carpathian Mountains.

"There I just sat comfortably in a civilian home and waited for the Russians," said the lieutenant.

The 24-year-old pilot, son of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Wisner, of Lowell, completed 15 missions before being shot down. He wears the Air Medal with one oak leaf cluster, and the Purple Heart.

Favorable Record In Fight On TB

State Wins Major Victory In Spite of War; Gain In Kent

A major public health victory is what Dr. William DeKleine, state commissioner of health, terms Michigan's continued downward trend of tuberculosis during the war years. Tuberculosis has increased in every other war and in Europe during this year.

Tuberculosis deaths in Michigan in 1944 were 54 less than in 1943 and 127 fewer new cases were reported. There were 1,748 deaths and 6,419 new cases in 1944 according to the health department records.

In Kent county in 1944 there were 36 tuberculosis deaths and 151 new cases, compared to 40 deaths and 144 new cases in 1943.

"Had tuberculosis killed at its 1918 rate there would have been three times as many deaths last year". Doctor DeKleine stated.

Part of the credit for the favorable record during the wartime years should be given to the strengthened federal and state programs for the control of tuberculosis. Three traveling x-ray units with capacity for x-raying 1,000 persons a day are now being used in Michigan to find unknown cases of tuberculosis. Health departments will place continued emphasis on tuberculosis control as a peacetime program, Dr. DeKleine said. Finding cases early and isolating them in sanatoria prevents the spread of tuberculosis.

Up and Down Kent County Roads

By K. K. Vining, Kent County Agricultural Agent

How about some late fall and early spring pasture? Ever think about sowing some rye on that field that had a crop of early potatoes or where beans or corn has been harvested, or some other field that you can get ready? Rye will make you more late fall pasture and will be the first to start in the spring providing plenty of feed until your native or alfalfa brome field is ready. Some one is going to say that rye will taint milk when pastured. So it will and so do other pasture grasses, but if cows are taken off the pasture a couple hours before milking there will be no odors.

Besides providing pasture, rye will pick up and hold any loose plant foods in the soil, prevent soil erosion and furnish a good supply of organic matter if plowed down. Even after pasturing a fair grain crop can be harvested.

Sometimes we think farm folks miss a good bet in not using rye as a cover and green manure crop. The vegetable growers in and around Grand Rapids use plenty of it for this purpose. The folks who look after potato work at Michigan State College are pretty certain that potatoes grown after rye will have less scab than after other crops. We are going to check some fields this fall in Kent County where spuds follow rye.

If you are going to sow for pasture or cover crop it should be in soon, at least before the last week of this month.

The lodge fund for the 4-H Club Camp received another substancial boost last week when a group of 4-H Club mothers, and friends, from the Sweet School community, in Lowell township, turned in $125.00 which came from the eating stand they operated at the recent 4-H Club fair. These women with only a few days notice, and not under the correct conditions, set up a kitchen and dining room. Meals and lunches were served for three days and they were good as attested by the number of folks who ate there.

Only a bunch of women with the background of a Methodist Ladies Aid, or other church group, could do the job. Many thanks for the meal service and the fine gift. Incidentally, the camp lodge fund is nearing the $100 mark.

We thought we had all our 4-H Club Fair news in last weeks column but Miss Densmore, Home Extension Agent, was notified this week that Wilmine Bachre, of Kent City, and Carlyin Schaefer, of Sparta, won their demonstration at the State Show. They demonstrated "Efficient Short Cuts in Ironing." We saw this demonstration a couple time and it was a good one.

If you would see a busy place go up to Clarence Crawford's, in Alpine township, and watch the 100 or more women at work pitting peaches in the Crawford warehouse for the Gerber Products Company at Fremont. Most of these working are local folks. The peaches are pitted and preserved and taken to the plant at Fremont for final processing. The Gerber folks have been buying a lot of peaches in the Peach Ridge area and have had much to do with the favorable peach prices that have been received.

Carl Hessler and Son, of Courtland townshin who are irrigating their certfied seed potatoes for the first time this year report a heavy vine growth as a result, all indicating an increased yield of spuds. Folks interested in a portable irrigation system would do well to see the outfit at Hesslers.

Dr. H. B. Tukey, new head of the Horticultural Department at Michigan State College, will spend September 20 in the Kent and Ottawa fruit areas visiting orchards, storages, the soil conservation practices, and getting acquainted with growers. Dr. Tukey comes to Michigan from New York with a wealth of background in progressive horticultural work.

The Superior Furniture Company has had new sidewalks built along their frontage on East Main-st. and are improving the new parking lot for their employees.

Frank Godfrey has purchased from Mrs. B. C. Smith, the store buiding on E. Main-st., now occupied by the Bannan barber shop. Mr. Godfrey was formerly employed in the George Herald bakery.

T. M. Doyle has sold his home in the 1000 block on East Main-st. to Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Knee of Grand Rapids. They have two children, a girl 16 and a boy 12, and are planning to move to Lowell in the near future. Mr. Knee is sales manager for Mid-West Refineries, Inc., Grand Rapids.

The Lowell high school band was one of three bands participating in the celebration at Rockford last Friday, honoring Lt. John C. Sjogren, who was awarded the congressional medal of honor, for single-handedly wiping out nine Japanese pillboxes and killing 43 Nipponese soldiers on Negros island last May 23.

The Blanding Dairy plans the construction in the near future of a two-story building, 30x75 ft. on property in the 600 block on West Main-st., recently acquired from Nick Kloosterman. Mr. Blanding states that the first floor will contain the dairy equipment and an ice cream plant. The second floor will be used as living quarters.

Just about the happiest boy in town these days is 11-year-old Victor Reynolds. Vic, as he is known to everyone, has not had the use of his legs for a long time. But through the skill of his uncle, Byrne McMahon, he is now able to sit at the steering wheel of a well-built electrically operated three-wheeled automobile equipped with a motor, and visit the many places he has longed to go for some time. Sunday he drove to the Lowell airport and watched the planes at close range. Vic can also ride to and from school and can even carry one passenger on the rear of his vehicle. Many happy trips, Victor.

Farmers Help Make Price Control Work

Advice and suggestion from 11,000 farmers serving on OPA Committees and Boards all over the country have helped to make price and rationing controls successful. Their continued cooperation during the reconversion period will be the dangers of inflation are great will help assure continued success of these all-important controls as long as they are necessary.

On V-J Day some 10,000 farmers were serving on local War Price and Rationing Boards, 62 of OPA's District Agricultural Advisory Committees had over 1,800 farmer members. Forty nine of the OPA National Industry Advisory Committees, which meet in Washington, have a membership of nearly 400 farmers representing all areas of the country. Farmers generally, as well as those serving on committees and boards, have helped OP A immensely by giving it a better understanding of their problems and by pointing out how its regulations could be improved.

OPA will need the same understanding and assistance in the future if it is to do a good job of holding prices in check. Experienced help will be needed for expanding price panels of local boards. Farmer members who have served on gasoline and fuel oil rationing panels which will be disbanded are being urged to offer their services to the Price and Information Panels.

THE BLOSSOMING HOME

THE BIBLE TELLS how the "desert shall blossom as the rose." There are also some home grounds and back yards in many towns that look quite like a desert, with heaps of refuse, weeds, and poor looking structures. The householder's place would be worth more, and he would take more pride in it, if he made some effort to have those grounds blossom out a little.

It would not take any great amount of effort to clear up that disorder, and plant grass and shrubs and flowers, and make the place an ornament instead of an eyesore. People enjoy their homes better if they are improved and beautified and made attractive. They enjoy coming back to such a place after their work, and its blossoming makes home seem dearer to them.

HOME TOWN THOUGHTS

A town does well to encourage its home talent to give public performances of their ability as singers, players on instruments, dramatic performers, public speakers, etc. There is a lot of very able talent in our community that is capable of entertaining the people.

The Grand Jury And Politics

(Editorial in the Hastings Banner, Thursday, August 20)

A week ago Sunday, Mark Beltaire, writing in "The Town Crier" column of the Detroit Free Press, created something of a sensation when he stated, "Kim Sigler plans to run for governor . . . on the Democratic ticket."

Many people throughout the state who appreciate the sort of opposition the Carr Grand Jury is facing, suspected a "plant"—a suspicion confirmed by Mr. Beltair, himself, who made the following retraction in the Sunday edition of the Free Press:

"That informaton (that Sigler planned to run for governor on the Democratic ticket came from a source I had every reason to believe was sound . . . and without a political ax to grind. He was —ron- and so was I. Now the McKay forces are using my honest mistake in an attempt to persuade potential jurors that the coming trial is political persecution. Their work is making the going more difficult for Sigler who says: "I haven't the slightes. ambition to run for governor . . . and I am not a Democrat."

Even befor this retraction, however, many observers about the state had the situation "sized up" correctly.

Nelson Brown, editor of the Ingham County News, who has had an excellent chance to observe the grand jury in action (since several of the trials have been held in Mason' carried the following editorial headed "Kim Sigler Not a Candidate:"

"Despite the lead sentence in a Detroit newspaper column Sunday, Kim Sigler, special ingham county prosecutor handling grand jury investigations and resulting prosecutions, is not a candidate for governor. He has never made any such announcement or intimation; nor has he said or done anything which would lead to any such inference. The story was planted. It may have been planted to injure him personally, or it may have been planted to make someone believe he is using the grand jury as a stepping stone to nomination.

"The tactics are not new. The same technique was used in Shakespear's Julius Ceaser. Ceaser was charged with being ambitious and it was on those grounds that Brutus used the knife. If a man desires to run for governor on motives questioned, then part of his usefulness is taken away, even if the imputed motives are good in themselves.

"If Kim Sigler did have any desire to be governor he would not be so foolish as to make the announcement on the eve of the start of the biggest conspiracy trial in the whole batch. He would not be so stupid as to jeopardize both the outcome of the trial and his nomination in one fell swoop.

"The incident of the fake political announcement is further proof, if further proof is needed, that Ingham county people should not permit themselves to be misled during the period which conspiracy trials are being held. It is up to the people of this county to sift and weigh the evidence presented. It is up to all of us here in Ingham county to guard our tongues and even to guard our ears. The man or men who planted that story about Sigler being a candidate for governor did not plant it to compliment him. The story was planted to induce someone to believe that as special prosecutor he also has one eye on political preferment.

"From what most people here in Ingham county know of grand jury affairs, the belief prevails that it will take another year or two to bring to a close all the trials resulting from the grand jury investiaution being conducted by Judge Carr. And it will probably take another two or three years before the state and U. S. supreme courts decide some the appeals resulting from circuit court action. The job Kim Sigler has right now and will have for some time to come is every whit as important as that of being governor."

The Detroit News took notice of the Free Press statement and made the following observation in an editorial headed "Trying to Trick Mr. Sigler:"

"Kim Sigler, special prosecutor for the State graft grand jury, has denied as emphatically as he could the published report that he wants to run for Governor on the Democratic ticket."

The report bore all the earmarks of a 'plant', which Sigler believes it to have been. The trick is an old one. If Sigler can be convicted, out of courtesy of harboring political ambitions. that explanation of his motives might handicap materially his work in court.

"I'm too damned busy to run for anything,' he said, in his own words, when he phoned. 'It looks like some scared politicians are trying to inject politics into our trials . . .

"'Judge Carr and I don't have to play politics—we've got something else to do'."

Politically wise Murl H. DeFoe made the following observation in the editorial columns of the Charlotte Republican-Tribune:

"A Free Press columnist, Mr. Beltaire says Kim Sigler is 'eyeing the democratic nomination for governor.' While always more or less an independent we doubt this statement. Sigler was given a democratic label more through exigency than choice when he first landed in Hastings. A somewhat discredited republican prosecutor seeking a re-election when a half dozen prominent Barry county republicans urged newcomer Sigler, just in from Detroit to run as a democrat and pledging their support. The life long and influential republican Hastings Banner headed up the Sigler program. The alert and fluent Sigler was an easy winner and served four terms under this same sponsorship. In other words Sigler's politics were made for him by the strongest coterie of hard headed republicans in anybody's county seat. The approaching Detroit municipal election may or may not have any special interest for out state politics, and in our opinion for Mr. Sigler least of all."

It is not surprising that someone is attempting to inject a political issue at this time into grand jury affairs. One of the most important trials to date is scheduled for early next month. The trick is an old one and an obvious one—but it can work if enough people "take the bait."

Service Flag

By EDWARD GRASSFIELD
McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Features.

POLICE Lieutenant Moore tried to assume a stern expression as he looked down at the little old lady standing before him.

"You say you are an impostor and that you want to give yourself up?" he asked kindly. "Now just who was it you imposed on, Mrs. Murray?"

"On my country, Your Honor," she replied. In spite of her determined air she could not keep her voice from trembling. "I didn't mean any harm. You see, sir, I'm a widow without any children and it all started when I began to walk in the park evenings to get a little air.

"The boys in service are such fine looking young men. When I heard them laughing and talking I used to pretend that one of them was mine, especially when he would say something about writing home to Mom."

Her voice broke a little and she blinked rapidly before beginning anew. "The next thing I did was to start noticing the mailman. Every day he brings a letter from everyone to some house on the block. I know because I watch him from behind the curtain.

"I envied everyone who had a little service flag in the window until I couldn't bear it any longer. I bought one and hung it in my own window, even though I had no right to. I sit down every night and write a letter to my boy abroad. Of course I never post it because I haven't anyone to send it to, but it makes me feel as if I have."

"This precinct was mentioned. That's why I came here.

She took a little lace-trimmed handkerchief from her pocketbook and dabbed at her eyes.

"Here, now!" The policeman came from behind the desk and put his arm around her. "I guess we all make believe once in a while."

"Not wrong?" She stared at him incredulously. "Why, I saw in the paper that it's wrong to pretend when it concerns your country. This precinct was mentioned, that's why I came here." She dug down into her bag and handed him a newspaper clipping.

BOY IMPOSTOR JAILED

Last night police arrested George Marlin of 32 Chester street. The 18-year-old youth, an orphan, is charged with illegally wearing an army uniform and will be arraigned tomorrow morning at the 2nd precinct.

The policeman laughed. "That's different, Mrs. Murray, and even that worked out all right. At first the boy was turned down for some minor defect and he was self-conscious because he couldn't get in the army. The judge suspended sentence when he found out the boy's motive, and the army was willing to accept him for limited service."

He looked at the clipping again and whistled. "Wait a minute. There's something here I didn't see before." He turned to the attendant. "Mike, bring that boy out again. I want to speak to him."

Mrs. Murray looked up frightened. "Officer, I hope I haven't made trouble for him by coming here."

The lieutenant didn't answer but he smiled as the boy approached. "George, this is Mrs. Murray," he began by way of introduction. "She is an impostor, too, and in a sense an orphan like yourself."

The youth seemed puzzled, looking from one to the other.

"You are hereby ordered to write to her twice a week and to adopt her as your service mother. Do you agree?"

"Gosh!" George blurted out, "I'll say I agree—that is, if Mrs. Murray really wants me to. Gee, I'll be getting letters like the rest of the fellows—just as if I had folks!"

Mrs. Murray threw her arms around his neck. "Write to me quickly, George. Write as soon as you find out where you will be stationed." Then she hurried out the door.

The lieutenant noticed George's bewilderment at her quick departure. "She's in a hurry, George," he said. "She has a mighty important flag to hang up."

The lad still didn't understand, but he was happy. That morning he had acquired an Uncle Sam and now he had a mother. One thing he did know: he'd never let either one of them down.

It seems impossible for any publication to get so dull or rendersless that nobody will buy it or advertise in it.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I: At last Flicka's colt is born. It is white—the only white horse ever foaled on Goose Bar ranch. high in the mountains of Wyoming. Ken McLaughlin, Flicka's 12-year-old owner, finds them out on the range in a cold rain-storm.

CHAPTER II: Ken is disappointed. He had hoped that the colt would become a famous race horse. This badly formed white foal is evidently a throwback to the Albino, the wild stallion that is Flicka's great grandsire.

CHAPTER III: Ken waits for a favorable time to announce the foal's arrival. Charlie Sargent, millionaire horse breeder, and Col. Morton Harris, his home guests. The colonel wants to have his mare bred by Banner, the McLaughlin stallion.

CHAPTER IV: Rob McLaughlin, Ken's father, invites the colonel and Sargent to ride out with him and get Banner. The colonel, on a mare, has a spill and has to be carried home.

CHAPTER V: Everyone laughs and jeers at the white colt. Ken's father, Neil, who names all the horses, calls him Thunderhead, but nicknames him Goblin.

CHAPTER VI: Ken reveals that Thunderhead's sire is not Banner but Apache-chief, largest can scarcely stand 14, and Rob is both relieved and disturbed. Banner, he knows, raises the stud fee and offers Ken breeding papers.

CHAPTER VII: Neil, depressed over financial difficulties, hopes that when how Thunderhead will develop into a fine race. Thunderhead is put out on the range with Flicka. When winter settles down, he is glad to see them in stables. His size and strength are surprising.

CHAPTER VIII: Thunderhead gets acquainted with oats. He is trained to wear a halter. When spring comes, he runs back to the range. One day he wanders around into the mountains.

CHAPTER IX: Thunderhead follows a mountain stream. An eagle attacks him and he runs home in terror. A week later, however he returns to the river, and goes along it until he reaches a sort of doorway in a wall of rock. Beyond is the amphitheatre of horses.

CHAPTER X: In the hidden valley Thunderhead encounters the Albino, and barely escapes with his life. Back at the ranch, Flicka is bearing her next foal. The veterinarian is attending.

CHAPTER XI: Flicka's foal, a filly, is named Touch and Go. Thunderhead recovers from his wounds, and Ken begins to train him. The horse is difficult to handle.

CHAPTER XII: Ken finally gets Thunderhead running freely. He shows astonishing speed and endurance. Rob and Neil discuss their financial problems. A collision develops.

CHAPTER XIII: Charlie Sargent is impressed with Thunderhead's speed. Ken trains him on a home-made track.

CHAPTER XIV: Thunderhead runs a half mile in 47 seconds, record time. By a lucky accident, he escapes pulling the McLaughlin's hopes for a winning race second entirely.

CHAPTER XV: Rob sells 14 horses at an auction in Denver to raise cash. He gets poor prices. An eastern buyer becomes interested in the McLaughlin stock.

CHAPTER XVI: Needing considerable money suddenly, Rob decides to sell off most of his horses. He ships 45 to a famous auction in Pennsylvania. Howard, going east to school, rides in one of the freight cars.

CHAPTER XVII: Rob returns while Neil is out riding. He doesn't tell her about the results of the sale immediately. Their mutual love grows warm again.

CHAPTER XVIII: Rob intimates that the sale was rather disappointing. Neil suggests that they operate a dude ranch.

CHAPTER XIX: The dude ranch idea is turned down. Rob tells Neil that they are going into sheep raising, and that he has already bought 1,500 ewes. Ken's report card is unusually good.

CHAPTER XX: Ken asks and secures permission to stay out of school until late October so that he can go to a race meeting in Idaho. Thunderhead is to be entered in his $10,000 claiming race. Touch and Go might be raced too. Rob says. Neil finds she is going to be another child.

CHAPTER XXI: Ken and Howard ride Thunderhead and Flicka on a mountain trip a month before the races. Thunderhead breaks away and joins the herd of wild horses led by the Albino.

CHAPTER XXII: Thunderhead encounters the Albino and kills him. Then he remains up the herd and disappears. Ken and Howard give up the search and go home.

CHAPTER XXIII: Ken relates the incident to his father.

CHAPTER XXIV: Touch and Go is sent to the races. Ken goes along, riding in Charlie Sargent's car. Meanwhile a sudden early cold snap causes Thunderhead to bring his wild herd to the Goose Bar ranch. Banner also comes in with his mares. The stallions begin to fight, but are separated by Rob and his men.

CHAPTER XXV: Rob puts Thunderhead in a trailer and rushes him to the race track, 800 miles away. They arrive a day before the race. Thunderhead surprises the railbirds in his morning workout. Ken realizes that his horse wants to get back to his mares.

CHAPTER XXVI

A flashing glance of Rob's fierce blue eyes paid tribute to Ken for this sign of understanding and honesty. "All the same, Ken, we're committed to this and we can't turn back. Neither can Thunderhead turn back. It's too late. Remember, too, how much depends on this."

"What!"

"Have you forgotten all the things you were going to get for your mother?"

Ken winced.

"Right now, with hospital expenses facing us, believe me, it there's any money in Thunderhead, we need it."

Ken's mind began to turn and twist, looking in every direction for some escape for Thunderhead. Touch and Go had run in two races and had not shown in either, although she had nearly been in the money in the second race. She had one more chance, in the race which would follow the Greenway race that afternoon. But certainly she was nothing to count on now.

"And," went on Rob, "remember the things you were going to do for the ranch. Wooden fences. Clear off the debts."

"I know."

"Are you going to turn tail and be a quitter now at the last moment just because Thunderhead is mooning for his mares?"

"But dad—it's just because—because—well, he never was like this to me before. He always stared at me, and did things to me, aimed a kick or bite at me, you know. I always had to watch him. But he's changed. He was glad to see me this morning—glad! He—he—"

"What did he do?"

"Well, he just put his head in my lap and leaned against me the way he always did with mother, as if I was the only friend he had in the world—and gave a kind of a little mumbling grunt, you know the sound, as if it comes right out of his heart."

Rob was silent and could not raise his eyes to look at his boy.

At last he said, "Ken, you've got a divided loyalty here. And there's nothing tougher than that. Whichever way you turn you hurt yourself and someone else too. That happens to people often and it'll be a good experience for you. Are you going to stick to your plans to make money for the ranch and for all our needs—your own too, don't forget mine and Howard's—that's needed for your education and Howard's—Are you going to carry on with what you've started—with what we's all worked for for three years? Or are you going to—well, not exactly quit, but be deflected from your aim at the last moment?"

"Would that be wrong, dad?"

"It would not be strong, Ken. I could not admire such behavior. It wouldn't be manly. Sometimes, in life, you have to choose a course that is right and pursue it even if it hurts some innocent party."

Ken did not answer. Rob finished his breakfast, laid down knife and fork and pushed his plate away. "When Dickson gets on that horse this afternoon I want you to be pulling for them both with all your heart and soul."

Ken's face began to burn. Visualizing Thunderhead prancing out with Dickson on his back, he couldn't do anything but pull for him! The idea of any other horse beating Thunderhead!

"And remember this, Ken, although right now Thunderhead's got his mind on other things than racing, and he's sulking, yet he's been trained for a race horse. It's in his blood now. And after a little of it, this life will become his true life."

Ken's eyes lifted to his father's with a deep probing question. "Honestly, dad? As much as his wild life would be?"

Rob hedged. "Well, Ken, you know how I feel about horses. I always have the regret that when we take them for our own ends and make artificial lives for them, we deprive them of their true and natural and self-sufficient lives. But those would not always be necessarily better lives, in terms of the horse's well-being and happiness."

This made Ken thoughtful. Rob was getting impatient. He called the waiter and paid the check. A glance at Ken showed him that the boy was still in a state of indecision. He leaned across the table.

"Listen!"

Ken looked up. There was a different tone in his father's voice and a different look on his face.

"You're going to make your decision right now, Ken, and then stick to it."

"Me?"

"Yes. Be a man. It's your horse. If you want him taken away from the race course without making a try, why it's up to you!"

"Is it, really, dad?"

"Sure it is." But there was a sharp, contemptuous look in Rob's eyes. "Make your choice!" He leaned back and took out his pipe and lit it, then looked around as if he had no further interest in the subject.

The decision leaped up in Ken, ready-made. He said, suddenly, "He'll run. And he'll win."

The words went through Rob like the twang of a string and caused him the emotion he always felt when one of his boys took a stride toward manhood.

His hand came down on Ken's arm and squeezed it. The other hand reached for his hat. "Come on, son! We'll go out and see to getting Thunderhead's shoes changed."

They walked out to the stables together, and if anything more had been necessary to crystalize Ken's determination, it was the remark his father made as they reached Thunderhead's stall. "Of course, Ken, if he doesn't win, and if we have to take him back, you realize I can't have him around the ranch any more. I'll have to sell him for anything I can get—and that means gelding him first."

Ken came to a dead stop. "But dad! I'd get him off the ranch. He'd go back to his valley!"

"But he wouldn't stay," said Rob simply, "and sooner or later he'd get in a fight with Banner—and, well —you know what that means. You saw—"

Thunderhead did not like Dickson, and came out of the stall fighting.

The rest of the field were off and away on the two-mile race while Dickson was still trying to shake the bit out of Thunderhead's teeth and head him in the right direction. The ordinary, run-of-the-mill excitement of race-tracks which flares up, climaxes, and dies with every race that is run, is as nothing to the excitement that is generated when something really out of the ordinary happens; when the horses—one or more of them—take the game into their own hands, disregard the plans made for them by man, and stage a show all of their own devising. Then you really see such movement in the grandstands that you think of a river bursting its dam.

As when, at Hialeah in 1933 the two bay mares, Merryweather and Driftway, who had a feud of several years standing, proved the exception to the rule that mares never fight, and threw their jockeys and fought it out, biting, squealing and lashing each other all the way down the home stretch.

The stallion went up onto his hind legs.

As when Dinkybird of the Hawthorne stables took a fall at Jamaica, got up and was mounted again by his jockey, but continued running in the wrong direction and could not be stopped.

Into this kind of excitement that Thunderhead of the Goose Bar stables provided for the onlookers at Saginaw Falls on the afternoon of October twenty-fourth.

Ken, standing close against the fence in front of the grandstand, leaned down and thrust his head between the bars. The blood came up into his face as he saw the fight Thunderhead was putting up. The field was way ahead already. Stagehorn and Bravura, the two likeliest winners running in the lead, five others bunched against the rail behind them. and three outclassed contenders trailing hopelessly. Thunderhead stood in the same place, whirling and plunging. Dickson lashed him unmercifully, and, as always, the fury engendered in the horse by this conflict mounted and finally exploded, releasing him from the complex of his inhibitions and flinging him into his smooth running gait.

Ken straightened up, drenched in the sweat of relief. But the field was already sweeping around the turn into the back stretch. The grandstand fell into a sudden breath-holding silence as the white stallion hit his pace, running, as it always seemed with Thunderhead, in the air, propelled by one lightning-quick hood-thrust after the other, the unbelievable power of which kept him hurtling forward at a speed which was rapidly diminishing the distance between himself and the rest of the field.

Dickson rode with mouth open and a look of dumb amazement, and as Ken glanced around him, he saw this expression thirrored on a hundred faces.

The horses swept around the track.

Thunderhead passed the tail-enders, gradually overtook the next group and at the head of the home stretch passed them too. At that, the grandstand came out of its stupor and a low, sustained sound burst from it. Thunderhead was pulling up on the leaders, then was abreast of them, then passed them. At this, the grandstand rose, swayed, and burst into a roar, fluttering hands and programs and hats.

Thunderhead wavered and stopped, his flaring, white-ringed eyes and sharply pricked ears turned nervously to this strange heaving mountain to the right of him. At Dickson's yell and the shaking of the bit in his mouth, the stallion went up onto his hind legs.

Bravura and Staghorn rushed past, beginning the second lap of the race.

"Whip him, Dickson! Beat hell out of him!" Ken's voice, cracking with strain, reached Dickson from the crowd. Dickson cast one hopeless glance toward Ken as Thunderhead whirled and plunged, and a wave of the jockey's empty right hand showed that he had lost his whip.

Ken's open mouth closed without another sound and his face paled. Dickson pulled off his cap and beat it from side to side on Thunderhead's neck. Other horses passed him, streaming along the rail. Suddenly Thunderhead plunged forward, and again Ken was weak with relief. He unclenched his fingers slowly. Little bleeding scars were in the palms of his hands. It was all right now. Wardrobe Chart Helps In Choosing Accessories

A great help in choosing suitable accessories is a wardrobe planning chart. Such a chart simplifies and clarifies the process of selection if it is carefully followed. The chart is drawn with about 10 spaces across the top of the page and as many places down the left side as you have different garments in your wardrobe. Along the top are listed your various types of accessories, such as shoes, gloves, bag, sweater, blouse and hats. Down the left side of the page are listed the garments you have on hand or will need to get. This chart is filled in by listing the accessories you have or need in the column designated for that accessory and across from the garment with which you'll wear it.

Obviously some article, such as shoes, will need more than one place. On the other hand, if a particular article is worn with only one garment, it will be listed in only one place. Suppose you have listed in the left-hand column a black coat, a wine suit and a dark green dress. You need a new hat and a new blouse for the suit, but your black bag, gloves and shoes will continue in use.

The most obvious choice of hat would be black, but there are also other possibilities, and black will do nothing to brighten your wardrobe. Since a new blouse is to be bought, it will be well to correlate the color of the hat with the blouse. Pink or soft rose is a possible choice. This shade in a blouse will be interesting with a wine suit, but there are very few people who have the coloring that would be suited to such a soft color in both a hat and a blouse. The hat should be tied to the blouse and tied to the green dress in some way, either by a piping of color, a pin or some other detail added to the dress.

Train Body to Develop Erect, Straight Figure

The person who is erect, straight and energetic has a good figure. The way the body is held is the result of training and habit. The muscles and bones tend to take the same positions day after day, so posture habits should be good.

Stand in front of a mirror and see if you look like this: Your feet should be parallel, with the weight balanced equally upon the ball and the heel of the foot. Knees should be flat in the lower part. There is no exaggerated curve in the back. The hips should be flat across the back; the shoulders are even. The head is erect and a straight line could be drawn through the ear, shoulder cap, hip bone, knee and ankle bone. If you look like this, you don't have to worry. If you don't look so, it's time to do something about your posture.

Do you stoop over the sink, the kitchen table, the wash tubs, or the ironing board? Adjust the height of these work surfaces to your own height. To sweep, mop, or stir food in a pan at the stove requires continuous standing. Be sure you do not round the shoulders and chest or thrust the hips out of place.

Children's Teeth

The best way to help children have good sound teeth is to serve a well-balanced diet of foods which provide body building materials. These foods are milk and milk products, green and yellow vegetables, potatoes and other vegetables and fruit, meat, poultry, fish and eggs, tomatoes, oranges, grapefruit, bread, flour, and cereals, either whole grain or enriched, and butter or fortified margarine. These are called the "basic seven" food groups. The mother's diet before the child is born has much to do with the quality of teeth. The child's food habits will affect them also. Teach children to be careful to use but not abuse their teeth. In addition to eating the tooth-building foods, keeping the teeth clean is important. Careful brushing of the teeth and gums and removal of all food particles is very important. Regular inspection by a good dentist, once or twice a year, will result in detection of conditions which need to be improved and the discovery of small cavities which need repair. Good food and health habits with the aid of a good dentist will enable many to keep their teeth throughout a long life.

This was one of the many strikes they carried out o the left flank of the American campaign on Okinawa, to which Admiral Nimitz referred.

Farmers Join Hands To Boost Production

The war emergency has stimulated small farmers to "join hands" with neighbors in establishing group services that none of them could afford individually. Farm organizations and agricultural agencies have encouraged them to do so.

Last year, with Farm Security administration assistance, 1,499 neighborhood group services were established serving 8,487 families. In each group, members pooled funds to buy equipment or blooded sires which each needed on his farm, but which would not be profitable for one of the farmers to own and use alone. About 1,000 of the groups obtained tractors, trucks for picking up milk, threshers, peanut pickers, or other equipment. Some 400 of the groups bought high quality sires for improving their livestock.

Including these newly formed groups, about 17,000 neighborhood services were in operation last year. The groups are informal and unincorporated. Their members are neighbors who have entered into agreements to share ownership and use of needed facilities. Some are borrowers from FSA, some are not. FSA makes group service loans, on an individual basis, to families who need financial assistance to pay their share. FSA supervisors also offer advice and guidance if the group needs these. No financial help was needed in about 40 per cent of the groups formed in the last year. In 1944 FSA advanced a total of $635,600 in group service loans.

Wash Gloves Often, Milady Is Advised

Cotton and rayon gloves usually wash well, and many varieties of washable leather gloves are on sale. These include pigskin in light or natural color, cape, chamois, doeskin, except in deep dyes, white buckskin, goatskin and calfskin. However, never attempt to wash leather gloves unless they are stamped "washable" on the label or inside of the glove. Gloves which have once been dry cleaned should never be washed, and kid gloves always require dry cleaning.

Wash gloves frequently, because severe soil makes rubbing necessary, and rubbing may injure the finish or roughen the surface. Wash gloves according to any special directions given by the manufacturer, or wash gloved hands in mild, lukewarm suds, squeezing and pressing, but never rubbing or brushing. Exceptions to the "hand in glove" rule are chamois or doeskin. Wash these off the hands, because they soften when wet and may stretch or tear.

When gloves are clean, peel them off gently from the wrist, and rinse in lukewarm water until water is free of soap. Don't twist or wring. Roll gloves in a turkish towel to take up extra moisture.

Raw Cabbage

Raw cabbage is better known as a vitamin C rich food and for this reason it is placed with the tomato and citrus fruits in group two of the basic seven food chart. A serving of one-half to three-quarters cup of raw cabbage will furnish one-quarter of the day's need of vitamin C, providing certain precautions are taken. To capture these food values the cabbage must be garden fresh. It should be chopped in larger pieces than is customary for shredded cabbage, because finely cut cabbage exposes more of the surface to the air and vitamin C is decreased through oxidation. So, prepare cabbage to be used in salads as near serving time as possible, but if it must be cut in advance, keep the cabbage covered and stored in a cool place. And if the cabbage must be cooked, do it quickly. The best method of cooking to retain vitamin C is to steam the cabbage. Cook it uncovered in a small amount of water for five to seven minutes. Prolonged cooking in large amounts of water can cause as much as 95 per cent destruction of vitamin C.

World's Automobile Center Hit By Plague of Strikes At Time Reconversion Aim Is Uppermost

Michigan Press Association Service
Gene Alleman, Manager

DETROIT—The Michigan metropolis of more than 1,500,000 inhabitants is still the world's automobile center and is still having labor trouble.

A vocal minority in the newly-organized automobile industry is chiefly responsible for the current plague of strikes. Oddly enough the labor conflict is occuring just at a time when labor leaders are yelling the loudest at Washington about the rise of unemployment during reconversion and the resultant need of more unemployment compensation for jobless workers.

Governor Kelly is asked to call a special session of the state legislature. Michigan unemployment benefits, among the highest in the nation, would be boosted to $30 per week.

Dynamic Detroit astounded the world with its output of munitions. Perhaps it is inevitable that labor should try to hold outo its war-time boom earnings.

• • •

Overtime beyond the 40-hour week, plus double time for Sunday's and holidays, fattened the Detroit war workers' purse to a degree unknown in pre-war days.

The sight of Negro workers flocking into ritzy Detroit style shops and paying inflated prices for every-day garments was commonplace here during the war. In constant need of more workers to fulfill bumper government contracts, manufacturers welcome the arrival of Negroes and whites from the Middle South and the Deep South. An abundance of labor contributed in part to the success of Detroit industry in meeting Washington's demands for more and more tanks, more and more airplanes and more and more of everything else essential to Victory.

Now that the war is over, and with it the bonanza of overtime earnings has come to an end, labor is fighting to retain its recently-won benefits. Workers are resisting the inevitable adjustment to peace-time production.

• • •

The viewpoint of management in the September strikes is expressed by Henry Ford II, executive vice-president of the Ford Motor company. He said recently:

"They talk about 66,000,000 jobs. How can there be that many jobs when the workers quits before reconversion gets under way? Perhaps the labor unions have no responsibilities—or refuse to accept them. The fact about strikes, now however, is that the average worker fails to realize the consequences of the strike. It not only cuts his own throat, strikes are now a serious impediment in the reconversion efforts."

The strike situation is a paradox to the demand of the U. A. W.-C. I. O. for full employement by private enterprise or full employment by government subsidy and deficit financing.

Victor G. Reuther, official of the U. A. W., served notice on Michigan newspaper editors at Ann Arbor, nearly one year ago, that he was willing to scrap the system which has given Americans the highest living standards on earth if private enterprise failed to create 60,000,000 jobs after the war.

• • •

Just as the government footed the bill during the war, so the yovernment should make possible a continuance of war prosperity during the peace-time.

This, in brief, is the viewpoint of R. J. Thomas, president of the U. A. W.-C. I. O. who recently advocated that the government pay a bonus of $1,000 to each war worker at the time of severance from unemployment.

Some U. A. W.-C. I. O. union leaders are campaigning for an outright federal subsidy covering peace-time wages. Each worker then would receive 48 hours' pay for 30 hours' work. The economic fact that the taxpayers would be paying for 18 hours of unproductiveness and hence that the workers themselves would ultimately have to help foot the bill, if government bankruptcy was to be averted, had apparently not occured to the labor leaders.

• • •

Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach, in his Labor Day address, cautioned organized labor to execute greater responsibility for the public good or risk restrictive action by the federal government. A quotation: "We cannot have full employment unless we have full production of goods and services. And we cannot have full production unless we have full consumption. And we cannot have any of these—full employment, full production, and full consumption—if our productive machine is stalled and our power to consume diminished as a result of chaotic industrial relations."

Detroit's labor relations today are just that—"chaotic."

Irresponsible labor leadership, such as that of Mr. Thomas, is one of the deplorable handicaps in the path of full employment here.

• • •

Upstate at Cassopolis, the county-seat of Cass county, is a country newspaper editor who recently observed his 57th anniversary of service to his community.

William H. Berkey is his name. "Bill", as he is called by everyone, possesses typical Yankee traits of old-fashioned sanity, candor and integrity. When he writes an editorial, he calls 'em just as he sees 'em. Recalling Mr. Thomas' demand for the $1,000 war workers bonus, Editor Berkley presented the following comment in his newspaper:

"These labor leaders (C. I. O.) say that the war workers did a 'superlative' job of turning out war equipment and therefore are entitled to a bonus of $1,000 each, and that the money could be paid from the unexpended balance of funds that were appropriated fo war with Japan.

• • •

"Let's examine this a bit. Every one of those war workers received extra pay during the war effort, with time and one-half for overtime and double pay for Sundays and holidays; and, while we hate to say it, the whole country was full of stories of wasted time in the war plants.

"But, granting that every one of them did a full and honest day's work every day, what claim have they as against the millions of soldiers and sailors who fought and suffered on the firing lines, or on the ships,or in the air? These people who stayed at home, worked in warm factories on comfortable jobs and enjoyed the comforts of home were made better off financially by the war. The people of America will not stand for their looting the public treasuries now that the war is over."

To which a lot of weary Michigan taxpayers, just as patriotic as any ex-war worker, will add a fervent "Amen."

The road to federal subsidies is also the road to state capitalism and its inevitable consequence: Totalitarian government.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear mother, Harrfet E. Morse, who passed away September 13, 1934.

In our lonely hours of thinking,
Thoughts of you are ever near;
We who loved you, sadly miss you,
As it dawns another year.
