Junior High Curriculum Draws Widespread Interest

A novel experiment in education has attracted wide interest from other area schools ... and perhaps needless cri-ticism from Lowell Area School

But, in the opinion of local faculty members, the system of "elective courses" for jun-ior high students is beginning to pay dividends.

According to Mrs. Sandra Van Weelden, who outlined some of the general courses offered in a special seminar at the junior high last Thursday, it's a matter of "using a little sugar to make the medicine go down easier."

Principal John Gabrion told he turnout of 40 parents and herested residents that the hy of the new philosophy of the LPW pro-gram, borrowed from a Mas-archussetts school, is designed to do away with stereotyped, traditional curriculum and to better meet the needs of chil dren today.

essence, the program ates the need for study halls with students utilizing a portion of each classroom sion to work on advance les-

Mrs. Ruth Ward of the scionce department said that the study hall periods in the past were "nothing short of chaos."

"Good students who wanted to use this time to study were constantly disturbed by others who either didn't want to study or didn't feel there was a need to during school hours,' she said.

Another value of the program, according to Mrs. Ward, stems from the fact that students who may not have had much success in their stu find the opportunity to make good under the new system.

This makes them work even harder in other classes," she poted

While the elective program is unique in its approach, the junior high has not strayed away from basic educati Each student must sign up for three of the four basic cours

according to his or her past

"What it all boils down to." says Gabrion, "is that teachers, parents, counselors and students are much more aware of a child's progress than they were under the more conventional grading system." Mrs. Ruth Arehart, who represented the social studies department, says she believes students have a far greater opportunity to explore and

"The single textbook is be-coming a thing of the past," 'she explained, "We now have many sources for information, One course we offer is called History in Reverse. "This is as important as learning to speak," she says. Speech, however, is still a vital part of the English pro-

"Each student is asked to give one speech a week for the nine weeks of a course," she explained. "In this way, they must learn to develop outlines, to develop topics and to research to prove a point.'

The nine-week study program offers each student the opportunity to concentrate on enrolling in a more acceptable course at an early date if he or she finds a current course not to their liking.

"We have had students start in a class and sudd find it wasn't what they thought it would be," says Gabrion, "At the end of nine weeks, they make the change to another course instead of continuing on throughout the entire school year."

A by-product of electives is "increased interest and at-endance," according to Gabrion and his staff.

The present program is being run with the same number of teachers, though enrollment has soared from 575 to over 600. Most teachers must make four "preparations" daily instead of the usual one, but the majority of faculty members feel the additional work is well worth it, says Gabrion says Gabrion.

"If there are trouble spots, it is in the size of our class-rooms, the limited availability of physical education facilities and in the sequence of math courses," he explained.

"But we are working to ov-ercome these problems," he added.

One course that has drawn widespread criticism is called "Horse Sense." It is among a variety of courses (small me repair, oceanography, rockets and rocketry, animal relationships, simple home repairs and others are included) that offer a student the chance to learn about matters not or-dinarily found in standard text-

Referring directly to the course on "Horse Sense," Mrs. Van Weeldon declared:

We don't have any stables we don't raise hay . . in fact, we don't have horses . . . pericd! Instead, we use books, movies and visits with owners of horses to teach youngsters who wish to learn more about

The key to the program, Gabrion says, is exposure and exploration.

The Grand River Watershed Council, along with Federal and state officials, are interested in getting initial reports on the stream monitoring program to determine to what extent communities along the Grand River and its tributaries will have to treat sewage for removal of phosphates.
