JOURNAL JOTTINGS.

When you catch a flea you've got him, but when you catch a man who owes you, you don't get him.

Rev. G. L. Mount, informs us that their fourth and last quarterly meeting will be held next Sabbath evening.

The Lowell Union School will commence on the first Monday in September. Students be ready to commence your fall studies then.

A bean pod twenty-five inches in length in Rob. Marshall's garden, so frightened several grown people the other day that they didn't know beans.

And Mr. Owen has a squash in his garden so big that four men can't carry it off—when Mr. Owen is around.

If J. P. Planagin means what he says, he proposes to deliver his pictures and books to the fortunate ones of this vicinity this week and next.

Yesterday we were summoned to go out in the country to help cut up a couple of school districts, and it is possible that the JOURNAL will go to its readers late this week.

Soon the mail carrier of Grand Rapids will go with erring step through the aristocratic avenues of Grand Rapids and leave Miss A's long expected letter on old Mrs. Z's doorstep.

The funeral of Judge Ramsdell was attended with Odd Fellow honors. The services were held at the Baptist church; Rev. A. D. Flagg officiating.

It is said that Carleton, the poet, receives his inspiration from the "commonest of things in nature." We would like to have him stand on West Water street, near Main street...

Secretary J. P. Thompson writes us that the Peach Festival of the State Pomological Society will be held at South Haven, Sept. 3d and 4th, and invites us to be present to get our share of peaches and grapes.

We are indebted to Rev. Mr. Waldo for the minutes of the General Association of the Congregational Churches of Michigan, and to his estimable wife for a very handsome bouquet of flowers, made expressly for our sanctuary.

The Merchants Despatch Transportation Company has done something for its country this time. It has lowered its freight rates from New York to Detroit to 28 cents for first class and 21 cents for third class.

One of our merchants says he'll be hornswoiggled if he don't charge more goods every day than he can pay for out of a whole week's collections. Which implies that it is necessary to charge more goods and make no collections in order to save being hornswoiggled.

The Grand Rapids Eagle brands us as the 'Danburynewsmen of the LOWELL JOURNAL,' and the Clam Lake News, seemingly ignorant of the fact that we are still loved by a few relatives, asserts that 'the LOWELL JOURNAL man is getting funny and will rival the Danbury News man if he keeps on.'

And after all, you talk with these brethren of the press in private, and nine times out of ten they will call us a good fellow. But we will Moses this without malice.

THE LOWELL QUADRILLE CLUB is a new organization just organized. It is composed of the younger class of young men of our village, all of whom are as good as G. Washington in some respects.

These Club meetings will probably be held monthly during the fall and winter, providing they are supported by the invited ones. Elegant cards of invitation are just out, announcing the first hop at Train's Hall on Friday evening, August 29th. Bill, $1.00.

Believing that a select party can indulge in no amusement more sensible than a quiet, orderly, and well conducted hop, such as the Quadrille Club design to have, we hope all who receive invitations will be present at the Club's first meeting.

A young married man of this place gives us permission to say that he can't see where all the poetry of "married" life is, that folks talk so much about. He thinks it don't come in at the witching hour of midnight when the baby yells for liberty and the wife for paregoric.

A company of young men, armed with revolvers and fortitude, went out the other night to lurk in the shade and find out what reckless villain was stealing "those water-melons."

While watching and waiting for their victim, one of the company, who is passionately fond of cats, approached a dark spot in the grass and "confidingly said "Come kitty - pussy?—that's a nice kitty. Four shots were fired that night, and then a grave was dug and several outer garments which had been made to order, were deposited in the cold, cold ground.

The next day one of the company bought a new suit of clothes and a bottle of "West End," but the others were more economical, and only wore a few cast off garments which they donated to their younger brothers last year.

Mr. P. D. Sneathen will please accept our thanks for a box of nice harvest apples. The apples were left in our office over Sunday, and the boys who emptied the box on that day of rest, speak very highly of the quality of the fruit.

Certainly. Everybody went to Grattan; to that picnic you know; and most of them are expected back every day. But they had a good time at that picnic. Lowell was well represented there.

Before the close of the day the people began to disperse, and the question was asked on all sides, "going to Duga's?" and to Duga's they went. There they found an excellent supper and first class accommodations for their teams.

Stocking and Clafin came, a host of visitors came, and over 90 numbers were sold. They stayed 'till broad daylight in the morning, and went home saying they never had a better time.

The host and hostess were a "host" at the head of that party, and we are glad that they were paid for their trouble.

One of our best friends bumped his head against our office sign the other day very hard. We hadn't the heart to wait for him to come and ask our forgiveness, for, if we had, he might have told us to stop his darn paper. So we locked our office door, and told our tall printer to go around the other way and tell that man that "he needn't mind that sign, it was an old one, and if he had bumped it twice as hard, it shouldn't have cost him a cent."

THE TATTLEBERRY FAMILY are having their hands full this season as usual. They are giving currency to several instances of crime and black-mailing that never occurred, and are most diligent in imagining vain things generally.

They meet at the tea table, ask heaven's blessing to rest down upon them, and then sail in for an hour's bookbitching, during which time all the neighbors from A to Z are canvassed, and most of them started for perdition.

They go out upon the streets, with ears and mouth wide open, and look and listen, until their sense of hearing becomes shocked, their teeth become sunburnt, and their eyes behold strange sights. Then they go home and rejoice that they are not as other people are, and thankful that they have found something new for the foundation of another diabolical slander.

Now, of course, the world would be better off without tattlers, and tattlers would be better off if they had never been born, but the world is cursed with them, and ever will be, and so long as the devil needs help to work out his mission on earth, just so long will he cling to the tattler.

This is perfectly proper. Tattlers belong to the devil, soul and body. Some of them make long prayers, but they pray in a manner that pleases the devil and not the Almighty.

Their petitions sound well, but the desire of their heart is not incorporated in plain English in those petitions. They profess to work in the Lord's vineyard, but they trample down the good seed and cultivate the weeds.

But all who tattle don't pray; and all who pray don't tattle—thank God. Tattlers who make tattling a profession, and profess nothing else, have but little influence in decent society. They don't know the difference between a kick and a kind act; probably because they never attempted to administer the latter, and have never received any satisfaction from administering the former.

We took a stroll out in the country the other day, to commune with nature. We walked on and on, and wondered why everybody couldn't be happy in this beautiful world of ours.

Birds were singing, lambs were tripping, hens were cackling, dogs were barking, and we were smoking. Still on we went, drinking in the beauties of creation, until we reached the brow of a hill, and there found cool shelter beneath one of those remaining monarchs of the forest.

And there we sat. Our cup was full. We thought of childhood days, the old sweet home, the iron bound bucket, the little birch sapling, and all the fond associations of early youth. And still we lingered. And we said to ourselves, "there is poetry here; the world is full of it."

We lingered too long. We made that admission too soon. We ought to have left that hallowed spot and sought another, for just as we were taking out our pencil to chronicle a few stanzas that would be handed down to future generations as a result of inspiration...

the real and imaginary figures we had grouped together so beautifully for that purpose, were demolished in the twinkling of an eye, by a shout, loud and vociferous—"Wass, there, blast ye! Ges Bock, you old pirate; Wass, Wass!" We went and looked over the fence.

On the other side of that hill was a boy who wasn't dreaming of childhood days. He was trying to plow. His oxen were unruly and awkward. The boy was young, and illy adapted to that kind of manual labor.

So he belittled, we thought, as he played for and geese around a circle, with those oxen. He used the butt end of the whip and complicated language. The oxen marked out a place for a cistern with the plow, and then started with a graceful but accelerated movement to see how long it would take to go a straight mile.

The boy streaked after them, shouting camp meeting names, and wishing he was Dr. Franklin just long enough to strike those oxen with chain lightning. The boy was sped on. The boy sped on behind, still conversing with remarkable fluency. They all stopped in the north-east corner of the field.

Then we went back to that old tree, where, but a short time before, all was poetry and music. We sat down and tried to coax the muses back. The muses didn't come, but the mosquitoes did.

If nature ever communes with us hereafter, there must be a better understanding between us than there is now.
