We the undersigned, for our own good, and the good of the world in which we live, hereby promise and engage, with the help of Almighty God, to abstain from buying, selling, or using alcoholic or malt beverages, wine and cider included.
(This column is edited by the Press Committee of the W. C. T. U. of Lowell.)

"Public sentiment is the average individual sentiment. What part do you contribute toward it on the liquor question?"
Governor St. John says: "Kansas has increased 100,000 in population under prohibition, and not one of these is a saloon keeper."

A whiskey seller at Whitehall N. Y., is in a bad way. He has been found guilty of selling liquor illegally to 459 persons, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of $9,000 and stay in jail until it is paid.—Union Signal.

That was an argument for prohibition which even the inker can appreciate which was made by an Ohio drinking man. He said: "I have three boys. One of them is old enough to drink, and is drinking. He learned it in the saloon. My prayer is and my vote shall be cast, to close the saloons in my other two boys get into them and get to drinking, and I know scores and scores of other drinking men who are as anxious as I am to close the saloons before the little boys reach them."—Union Signal.

When the State writes "Criminal" over the door-way of the most elegant drinking saloon in Lowell, as well as over the lowest grog shops when it places at the bar of justice the tempter by the side of his victim, and when it stamps every package of liquor as a dangerous beverage, meriting destruction as a public nuisance, it has done much to warn the young and unwary, and to turn their feet aside from the downward path.—Judge Pitman.

History is only repeating itself. The pioneers in the anti-slavery cause were denounced as severely for voting their convictions as are the prohibitionists of to-day. The tribe of politicians are the same. The eloquence of the results and sneers and threats which to day are thrown at prohibitionists are only the echo of former years. But the handwriting is on the wall. The minority of to-day becomes the majorities of to-morrow when elected on the side of God and the right. Men may oppose the cause, but the principles stand forever. The denunciations of the political press and of politicians generally will only increase the number and zeal of those who dare to "stand up and be counted" as always and ever against the licensed liquor traffic.—National Temperance Advocate.

Moreover, we have learned from the constant improvements in the Maine law how careful the machinery for enforcement must be constructed that the law may not make a promise to the ear and break it to the hope. Of great value has been our study in Maine as to the actual province of prohibition. We found that it is a police power of the State in no wise assailing the personal liberty of the subject, but aiming rather to help restore "the personal liberty of the subject;" that it strikes at the most accursed traffic in the land declaring it a nuisance to be outlawed; so that if it still lingers in any community it shall be like a steady, skulking, cowardly jackal, instead of making itself at home like a well-railed, well-fed, well-fatted and domesticated swine. For as has been so tersely said: "The test of the success of any statute is whether on the whole it restrains or mitigates the offense or evil so far as any law can, and in determining this, it will be found that there are the same difficulties in enforcing the restrictions of license as those of prohibition. We have also learned that if prohibition does not always prohibit, neither does civilization always civilize, nor education educate nor Christianity Christianize. But they are God's blessed levers by which we can lift. His blessed tools with which we can work. His levers in the lump of humanity, obedient to the slow, sure law of growth. So, as these mighty forces of God are granted all the time there is, with full scope to run and be glorified, we have learned to claim as much for prohibition, youngest but most hopeful daughter of that kingdom which is first pure then peaceable. We have learned to retort in answer to the question "does prohibition prohibit?" with the question "does license regulate?" and to demonstrate that license is the mightiest failure and most gigantic fraud of all the centuries.—Extract from the Annual Address of Frances E. Willard at the Tenth Annual Meeting at Detroit.

The W. C. T. U. meeting held at Mr. Moore's Friday afternoon was pronounced by the members and visitors present very interesting. Mrs. Benjamin's instruction and remarks added much to the interest. The report from special Com. was a little amusing. Mrs. B. is holding correspondence relative to securing Miss Frances E. Willard, our National President to lecture in the 5th district. Lowell W. C. T. U. will be among the first to secure her.

What Ails Our Young Girls.
There is a great deal of chin-music constantly going around about the bang. It is not the bang, however, but piano-playing, as now observed, that is ruining our young girls and bringing the gray hairs of their fathers and mothers and beaux and the next-door neighbors in sorrow to the grave. Show us a girl who can play the piano from morning till night and we will show you a girl that isn't good for much else. Show us a girl that can play a fugue from Mendelssohn and knock all the con expressions and con amore out of a symphony in E minor, and we will, generally, show you a girl that can't tell a tea biscuit from a jew's-harp and who, if called upon to dust around and get a meal for a tired father or a hungry mother, would have to give it up and could only wring her hands and go in a corner and weep. The piano is all right; but there is no emergency in the piano business, while there is in kitchen work and house-keeping. "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," but man, big, strong hearty, robust, human man, when he is hungry, hath a void that the strains of Mozart will not fill, a stomach that "Kathleen Mavourneen" in six flats will not lull. In these remarks, let it be borne in mind, the writer has not lost sight of the fact that there are a few girls who, in the sweet bouquet of girlhood whose talons are comprehensive and blends the combination of musical art and practical womanly knowledge with a grace, a fitness as delightful as it is rare; but, as we observe, these phenomenal minds are rare in woman—or man either—and in nine cases out of ten the every-day woman who expects to run a domestic establishment and put in six solid hours a day on the stove, to make an assignment for the benefit of her creditors. The girl who sings "The Harp that once thro' Tara's halls" from morn to dewy eve must expect to mingle her sweet notes with the just and indignant wrath of a hungry husband when he comes home at night. All good husbands love to see music in their wives, but the average fair-haired dry goods clerk, the day-laborer, the machinist and the mill-man, who have to work hard and sweat for their dollar or two dollars a day, these men, we say, while they admire music, prefer to see it in their wives as it is played on the melodious floor-mop and the airy ironing-board, and they would rather, far rather, when they hear their wives at the piano singing "In the gloaming," and there is no supper ready at 6 o'clock, they would rather see them singing in the pantry, the kitchen and the dining-room. The craze for piano playing is making more rich music teachers and old maids than it is happy wives and homes. We do not object to music. Indeed, if it were possible we would be glad to see every young girl and wife in the land know how to play the piano. It is the evil tendencies of the thing that are objected to; the moral causes that arise to influence young girls so that they will think because they can play operatic nonsense on the piano they can turn the world upside down. There is a big demand growing for girls who can get more music out of broom-sticks and bake-ovens than pianos and thirty-two-stop organs. This demand is increasing in the United States every day, and after awhile it will get so that a young man will break the engagement or keep away altogether from an otherwise good girl when he learns that she has made a scientific study of the art of pawing ivory—that she can execute an intricate fantasia or paralyze a romanza and make a sonata look sick while the steak on the broiler is burning and making the house smell and the back-wheat batter on the bread-bake has turned sour.—Williamsburg Breakfast Table.

TO THE FORMER MEMBERS OF THE TONTINE MUTUAL.
Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 23, '84.
Before commencing to make the transfer from the TONTINE to the RESERVE MUTUAL, the whole ground was carefully examined and the plans of the latter company so arranged, that no member of the Tontine should lose by the change, as we expected neither pay nor re-examination.

The Articles of Association of the Reserve Mutual were submitted to the best legal talent of this city, and to the Insurance Commissioner of the State, and his authority, dated Dec. 7, 1883, secured before a circular or paper was printed. Notwithstanding this caution, certain newspapers published statements that led members to believe we were not authorized, and we have no doubt some persons were thus deterred from making the change, and suffered their policies to lapse, thereby forfeiting their right to a policy in the Reserve Mutual without payment of first premium. In proof of this, we are daily receiving letters asking to be reinstated. To convince our friends that we desire to deal liberally, as well as justly, we set issue new policies to all who will pay back dues and assessments, and furnish a certificate of good health at their own expense, from an examiner of the Company.

The new organization is already self-sustaining, with over two millions of business on its books, and a paying power four times as great as the Tontine ever had. With the agency corps largely increased and still increasing and the decrease by this move, in the cost of carrying the insurance, the Reserve Mutual will have assumed large proportions before the close of 1884, and those desiring insurance at all, and neglecting the present opportunity, will regret it. Letters of inquiry will be promptly answered.

NEARER TO NATURE.
Nature has made her laws with us, which we must obey or suffer the penalty. This law is often being broken or thwarted, which leads on to consumption. Every man believes consumption incurable. People have been educated to this belief which is proven incorrect by Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure, which is nature's great helpmate, and it cures consumption and all throat and lung diseases speedily and permanently.
