FREE TRADE AND THE SINGLE TAX ON LAND.

lieved the farmer is the especial pet of the free trade attorneys. All along the the free trade attorneys. All along the "reform" ranks—from White House to frontier cabin, from the ponderous daily paper of the metropolis to the smallest cross road orator—are to be heard wallings over the hard fate of the farmers, compelled to sid in making everybedy rich but himself. To reverse all this he is urged to yote for free trade, as with that will come lighter taxation, increased prices for farm products and other desired blessings. The policy of compelling foreigners to pay for the privilege of using the markets of this country is denounced as "vicious, inequitable and illogical," the cause of low prices for products and most other inconveniences the farmer is forced to encounter. Hence, it is forced to encounter the same state of the same shoot of the first Maday in December to slight of the first speech the dragon dayer culturing remark, "Henry George has girded up his loins, and is determined to go forth to slay the dragon of protection." In pursuance of which a Committee was appointed "for the distribution of single tax free trade literature," and a vote passed to "work conjointly with the New York Free Trade Club" in furthering the objects of the meeting.

Here is an aspect of the movement in behalf of free trade which it is well for the farmers of the United States to seriously contemplate before making up thair minds to assist the Cohden Club and its American allies in changing our existing facal policy for one dictated in the interest of our foreign and rival mathematics. Washington, Aug. 23.—In the House Satinfary's resolution was adopted revoking all leaves of absence.

Washington, Aug. 25.—In the House Satinfary a resolution was adopted calling on the Attorney-General for information as to the number of convictions that had been made for the offenses of polygamy and adultery in Utah and Idaha. win, and the fear of free trade is growing less every day. Business will con-tinue to liven up, unless there should be people would have given him some order for it. But now everybody takes it for just what it is-a piece of political at sent forth to try and stay the can party, because of the faint-hearted ower. But sad, sad shall the verdict be-"too late, too late."

CLEVELAND's fisherics message is too clearly a political bluff. Even the Ca-nadians see through its flimsy character. Here is what the Toronto Globe says about our brave President's effusion : "It is one of the points of the super-iority of our political system over that of our neighbor's that our chief magis-trate is not every four years under the necessity of playing to the gallery. The President in his miwage descends to what is plainly electioneering—a capped what is plainly electioneering—a capped trap, designed to outbid the Blaine-Bar-rison combination for anti-British votes. We suppose it would be foolish for Can-ada to deem herself insulted by any-thing said in the United States in the hurly-burly of leap year.

JAMES G. BLAKE, on Cleveland's fisheries message:

"President Cleveland is exactly following the Presidents of his party in his negotiations with Oreat Britain, an alternation of blushes and of surrenter, both of which are equally inconsistent with the dignity of a nation conscious of its great power. We certainly do not desire a continuance of the diplomary which, after studying a subject for three years, can radically change the position of the National administration between Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning. On Wednesday the President was still urging the senate through the entire body of Democrat senators to surrender all our rights in the fisheries by agreeing to the treety, and on Thursday he put those senators to surrender all our rights in the fisheries by agreeing to the treety, and on Thursday he put those senators to shame-by directly reversing the position he had strepuously held for three preceeding years. Ido not believe the American people will submit to such trifing with a great question. I believe, rather, that they will commit the government to the great party which from the first day of Lincoln's administration to the last hour of President Arthar's has maintained the force and prestige and right of the union against rebellion at home and aggression from abroad and did it without bravado or bluster on the one hand and without humiliating aurrender on the other."

CATTLE-Best.

Three years ago, on this same silver stream, We floated idly on our holiday; Do you remember, love? I in my dream, You is your old, impassioned, willful way? The meadows were as rich in flowers as now.

Three years ago I whispered I might long
To float with you toward a distant land,
Making our life one melody of song.
Feeling our life one melody of song.
Feeling our heart beat, sitting hand in hand.
Somehow we parted, and the night crept down,
Folding our scene in manule of regret.
You to your cottage went, I to the town.
Your voice was laughter, but my eyes were wet
Night locked the fields, and shut each rosy grove.

Your olds was another, but my eyes were wet. Sight locked the fields, and shit each roay You to taught me patience, and I whippered love!

Well, this is the way they told the story the met. I was a string to the dead. Well, this is the way they told the story as the met. I was a string to the strong as threezes, made tepid by the seashor beyond was it to the lighthouse standard. "A tragedy—here?"

"Yes, in that very grotto. It has become famous. The country folks call it "The Love Chamber." I knew of the rows of the rows are at the very time when its characters are the sperformed their parts. Light a cigarette, and let me tell it to you."

"I listen."

At the time I am telling you about it there was a very pretty girl at Biarrits, named Pascaline—a Basque about 18 years of age, tall and alight—with that peculiar grace so characteristic of those little mountain women. Her black hair gleamed under the yellow silk kerchief which abe always wore fastened about her head in the most coquettish style imaginable. Her ruddy lips, slightly sensuous, showed at every smile rows of delicate white teeth. Pascaline was a great dressmaler, and supported her father, a great big man, half paralyzed, who lived in perpetual revery, and rarely spoke except to reply with some peculiarly vague Spanish proverb to any question put to him. Be accaline adored the old man, and took are of him like a child. So folks used always to say, "Pascaline will certainly do well on account of the way she takes care of her father." Anyhow, she had a chance either way—to do well or badly; for ahe had two admirers. One was a mungleir. And, as was only right, a pascaline-a fine social position. The other was Maxime Sarrabeyrous, poor, young and handsome, who offered her his heart, and know was said to be a professional guide in the Pyrenees. He was really a samuggler. And, as was only right, experimentally a samuggler. And, as was only right, experimentally a samuggler. And, as was only right, experimentally a samuggler. And as was only right, ex

"To an give you a fine social position, Pascaline—a fine social position,"
And she would always reply:
"You are very kind and good, M. Moise, but I love Maxime."
And old Moise would go off grumbling to himself:
"She'll change her mind after awhile; she'll change her mind after awhile; she'll change her mind after awhile; she'll change her mind."
But things at last came to such a point that some decision had to be made. The two young lovers often took long walks along the cliff and people gossiped about them a great deal. Unfortunately they were very poor. A dressmaker cannot save very much, especially if she has a father to support, and smugglers have their dull seasons. But it is a very fine profession for all that. Poor as they were, however, they loved each other so much that they went to old Father Pascal one morning hand in hand and said: "We love each other and we want to get married."

The old man shook his head a little and
The old man shook his head a little and

The old man shook his head a little and

The old man shook his head a little and alowly responded:

"Very well, very well."

The lovers knelt down before him, and he blessed them. The betrothal was accomplished. Pascaline accompanied the youth to the usual scene of their promenade; and that evening they remained out on the cliffs very, very late. As the young Bauque girl was returning home full of happiness, with the joy of love swelling in her heart, she met Moise Dunes, who observed very gravely, scratching his nose as usual:

"I offer you a fine social position, Pascaline, a fine social position."

She answered:

some contrabandista. Pascalino cried from morning until night. As soon as her work was done she would hurry to the cliff, to remain there for long hours at a time, with eyes fixed upon the Spanish coast. Ahl had she only been free, how swiftly would she not have departed in search of her betrothed, beyond the mountains towering between her and lovel But she could not go; she must support the aged father. One night a cruel rumor came that Maxime had been tilled by the custom house officers. And in fact a whole year passed without further news of him.

Misfortunes never come singly. One night the little store took fire and burned down. No one knew how the thing happened. Pascaline and her father were ruined. Moise Dunez, their neighbor, had with his usual good luck escaped. His house was not even scorehed. But he did not dare to approach the pretty Basque any more, knowing she would say to him: "You are very kind, M. Moise, but I shall wait for Maxime Sarrabeyrous. He will come back, i am surse. But if he should not come back, i am surse. But if he should not come back, i all be faithful to him as though I were his widow. And I am a good girl, resolved to make my own living." Yes, she was a good, brave girl, poor Pascaline; especially brave and good, considering how unhappy her situation. After her little store was burned she could not work for others—much harder than before and for much less money. Now the old man had to remain all alone the whole day, and he was visibly declining. Two years peased and still round.

There can be but one answer to this question, and that is yes. We see it everywhere; we see it in the healthier condition of our wage-earners; we see it in the way their wives and children are dressed; we see it in their homes;

Free trade may be charity to foreign operatives, but I for one believe that charity begins at home first; that my own country is entitled to my first regard; that the interest of the wage-earner of this country is my interest; that his success is my success.

I also believe that what European manufacturers want us to do is not for our interest to do. When every European paper hailed President Cleveland's message with delight as tending toward free trade, it convinced me that it was not the best interests of this country that he should be re-elected.

When the London Times thunks the best use they can make of Irishmen is to help them to emigrate to this country and join the Democratic party, and thus break down our protective tariff, that makes me think that our tariff is a meaning the price of coal from the recent frosts.
