INCIDENTS SHOWING CHARACTERIS-TICS OF THE FINANCIER.

He Avoided Newspaper Men, but a Denver Reporter Trapped Him Once—Sent One Man to Jim Keene—How He Learned That Whisky Was a Bad Survivor.

There was nothing he detested more than newspaper notoriety. He used to dodge reporters, and only one of them, as far as known, ever fairly outwitted him. Fred Skiff, the city editor of the Denver Tribune, detailed reporter after reporter to interview Mr. Gould during one of his visits to Colorado, but each reporter found that the little railroad king would not be seen and had posted sentries all along the hotel corridors to drive intruders away. So Skiff went to the job himself. He hunted up a friendly Pullman car conductor and borrowed his uniform. Then he went into the hotel up to the stairs.
"Look a-here," said he to the first sentry he met, "what does Mr. Gould propose to do about that car? I must know right away, for if he isn't going to use it tomorrow, I've got to take it back to Chicago."

The sentry knew nothing about the car, of course, and advised Skiff to see Gould about it himself. So Skiff went fully into the grandeur of the half dozen lacks, growing all the time about the bother of being compelled to attend to sketches of his business. Judge Foster, winner of the race in 1887.
At Burns's station, Lind, George Heron, the keeper of a "quarry" who was taken from his bed by a mad dog, having known him back in Kansas.

"When did you get out of the newspaper business?" inquired the astonished lawyer. "I don't know," replied Skiff, "but I had to get out in that disguise in order to get in to interview Mr.
Gould."

"Young man," said Mr. Gould sternly, "if you're reporting on me, you're not right out of the room, for I am not to be interviewed."

Skiff argued the point and not being advised to be seated crouched at the foot of the chair.

"I shall stay here till you tell me what your plans are."

This audacity pleased Gould. He looked at Skiff, and seeing the lawyer checking his watch he turned to a loud laugh.

"Well, what do you want to know?" he said finally in the tone of a man who is satisfied with objecting.

"Skiff knew he had triumphed. He produced his notebook, drew up to the table at which Gould sat and industriously wrote putting out questions and noting the replies. The result was a reliable forecast of the man's general road enterprise in which Gould subsequently embarked, and of which the public would not otherwise have been forewarned."

Less happy was the fate of the Chicago reporter who followed Gould by rail down to Indiana and finally over-landed his special car at Washington at the door. Mr. Gould responded in person, and the reporter held up his card so that his victim could read it through the glass window.

"The Chicago Bugle wants your opinion," he shouted, "on the question of retaining the 6 per cent."

Mr. Gould regarded him through the glass with such a rigid expression that the interviewer has shivered at the mere memory of it ever since, and finally opened the door on a crank and asked:
"Young man, do you want me?"

"Yes, sir, I want to interview you on the subject of—"

Mr. Gould began to shut the door.
"On the subject of the devil!" yelled the indignant reporter as he saw all his hopes fading away.

"Young man," said Mr. Gould, opening the door once more, "if you're reporting on me, you're not right out of the room, for I am not to be interviewed. He's got all the letters and is anxious to give them away to spite old Foster."

Gould always believed that the secret of his ability to overcome other men in any contest of wit was his unique habit of lying. He never tasted whisky long enough to be able to get drunk. He was a small way and was mapping a con-try on the practical line of getting notions and meals of the farmers in exchange for making correct scribbles on their coupons. He became tired one day, after a long drive, and a country tavern. In his pockets was a 50-cent piece. It suddenly struck him that as a method to relieve his fatigue he would like to get a whisky. He went to a place of whisky where he found a sign of "No whisky" and he went back to his room. In his room he found a sign of "No whisky" and he went back to his room. In his room
