

Magazine Features Lowell And Ada Covered Bridges

Lowell and Ada, with their covered bridges, good fishing and fine food, are highlighted as top Michigan travel and vacation destinations in Automobile Club of Michigan's August Motor News magazine.

Auto Club's 1.1 million reader-members learn that West Michigan still has four historic covered bridges, two of which are at Lowell and Ada. Three of them—including the one at Lowell—still can be driven over. The one at Ada is restricted to foot traffic, Motor News points out. All are more than 200 years old.

If you enjoy plant tours, an article titled "West Michigan Offers" suggests a visit to the Amway Corp. at Ada, manufacturers of home care and personal care products. Visitors will find one of Michigan's newer attractions there, the Center of Free Enterprise, which was a feature of the New York World's Fair.

"Ten Favorite West Michigan Fishing Spots" quotes John Trimmer, district fisheries biologist for the Michigan Department of Natural Resources, who cites the Flat River from Lowell to Greenville as a fisherman's hotspot for smallmouth bass.

Ada's Coach Stop Restaurant is noted as an excellent family dining spot in the publication's "Dining Out in Michigan" column.

The August Motor News is devoted exclusively to West Michigan and the wide variety of tourism attractions it offers. This 31-county area—which stretches along Lake Michigan from Michigan's southern boundary north for 400 miles to the Straits of Mackinac and inland for some 90 miles—is extolled in more than a dozen articles, columns and editorials.

An article titled "West Michigan Has It All" points out that "West Michigan not only has four fun-packed seasons to offer visitors, but sometimes they can mix the best of what those seasons offer.

"This is a holiday area featuring spring's flowers, festivals and fishing; summer's sand, sun and surf; autumn's color explosion, and winter's skiing, snowmobiling and tobogganing," Motor News points out, "all within easy driving distance for some 60 million people."

Wesley B. Tebeau, president of the West Michigan Tourist Association, writes: "It's easy to fall in love with West Michigan, because it remains beautiful yet constantly changing, different and challenging all year long. There are 12 seasons here—12 entirely different months—in which the sight, the smell, the taste, the feel, the texture, the wind, the skies and the lakes and streams all continue to amaze me."

A gas-saving "Think Tank" tour suggests a seven-day, family-fun trip through West Michigan which includes some of the state's most breathtaking scenery, Great Lakes and inland lakeshore areas, fishing, swimming, canoeing, ferryboat and paddlewheel riverboat rides and fascinating and historic places to visit.

"West Michigan highlights include Lake Michigan's 400-mile-long beach, reputedly the longest fresh-water beach in the world, thousands of lakes and streams, acre upon acre of forestland, giant sand dunes, recreational activities the year around and a complete range of accommodations," Motor News continues.

The publication's "Conservation Corner" column points out that coho salmon, along with lake trout, steelhead and brown trout, have made West Michigan well-known throughout the world in recent years. The chinook, ranging up to 40 pounds, has become known as the top fighter of them all.

Carl T. Johnson, member of Michigan's Natural Resources Commission, points out that "Just 10 years ago, Lake Michigan was all but barren of sport fish. Today, a highlight for visitors is the superb fishing here. West Michigan may well be the world's finest freshwater fishing area. And the scenic attractions offered by West Michigan combine to make time spent here rewarding."

Manure Overflow Suffocates Trout Near Saranac

A Saranac farmer with 200,000 laying hens is attempting to comply with a state order to change his methods after an overflow of chicken manure in a recent heavy rainstorm resulted in a kill of some 300 to 500 trout in Lake Creek of Ionia County.

The farm is that of Harry Herbruck just north of Int. 96 adjacent to the creek, outlet for Morrison Lake, which flows north through Saranac and into the Grand River, according to Chester Harvey, district engineer for the Water Resources Commission.

Some of the manure is directed into a holding pond, and there also is surface water and roof drainage that can go that way. In the storm July 19, so much rain-water flowed into the pond that it topped the holding dike, causing it to overflow into the creek. Because of the nature of the wastes it takes oxygen out of the water, and as a result, the trout suffocated, Harvey said.

Herbruck was ordered to divert the rainwater from any pond that contains animal waste, to get this waste up on land, use it as a fertilizer and keep control of inventory so it doesn't overflow, clean out the coops on a regular basis, and supply a complete plan for handling animal waste on the rest of the farm. Herbruck also is expected to restock the creek with trout.

Plans New Building

The Easter Seal Society for Crippled Children and Adults of Grand Valley, Inc. is planning to construct a new building to house the Society's offices, workshop and loan equipment, according to Lee Buck, president. To be located on Telephone Power Drive (a private road), east of East Paris Avenue, between Lake Drive and Burton Street in Kentwood, the building will cover 10,000 square feet. Included on the 185' x 240' site will be a paved parking area for 22 cars.

Official groundbreaking for the project will take place August 8. Completion is anticipated near Christmas, 1974, with the Society occupying the building around January 1, 1975. At that time, the charity will vacate its present quarters at 217 South Division, Grand Rapids, and the latter building will be offered for sale.

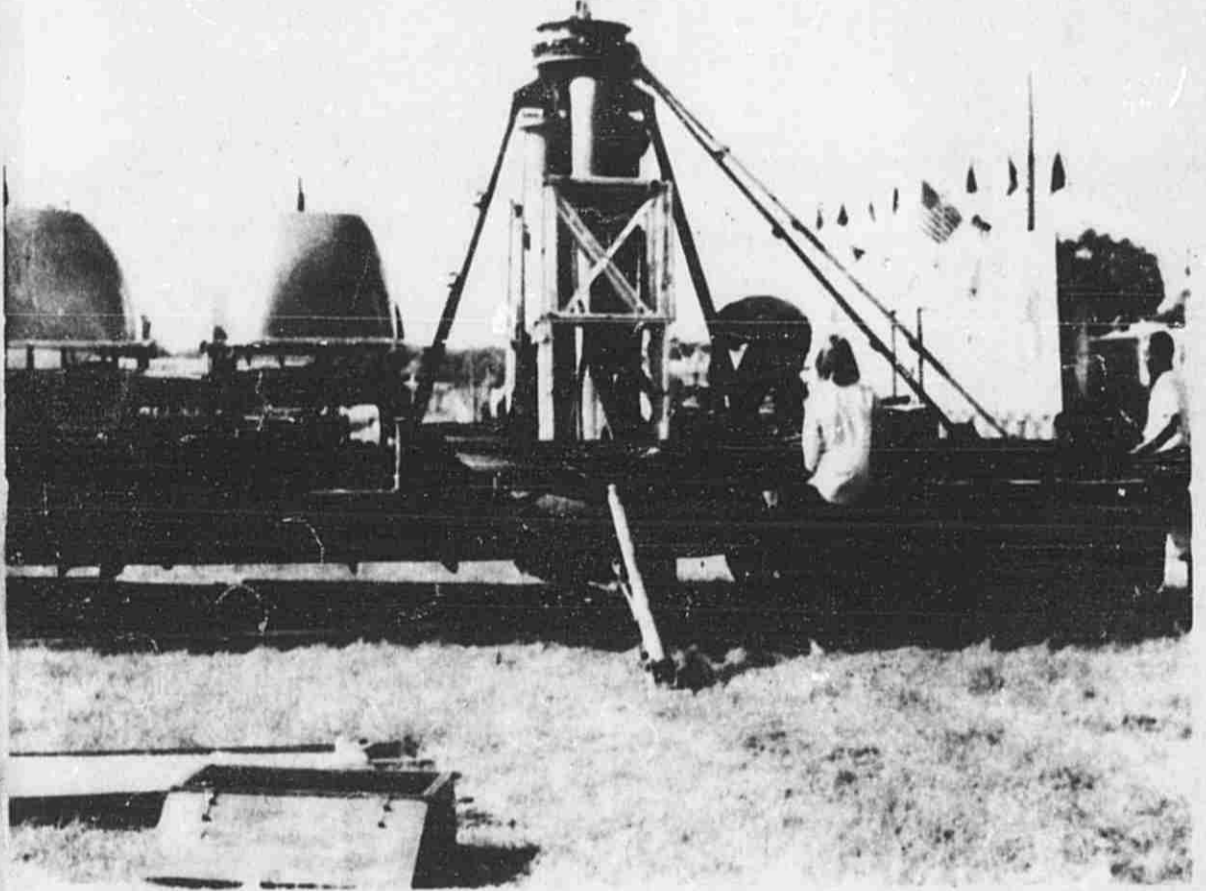

Investigate Shooting

Kent County Sheriff's deputies are investigating the shotgun wounding of a 36-year-old Lowell man in the 5400-block of Montcalm Avenue SE about 7 p.m. July 30.

Detective Richard Williams said Clyde M. Childs of King Street, Lowell, suffered a slight wound of the neck when he was fired upon five times with a 20-gauge shotgun while at the home. No arrest has been made, but Williams said he is questioning a Detroit woman in the incident.

Childs was treated by a physician and released.

4-H Fair Is 'Bigger & Better'

Engle's Amusement Company worker put up the mid-way rides for the 4-H Fair early Monday morning.

"It's bigger and better," was the comment of most fairgoers as they attended the opening of the Kent County 4-H Youth Fair at the Lowell 4-H fairgrounds.

Prevalent this year is a wider variety of carnival rides for both the adults and kids, plus mid-way attractions that will entice every member of the family to test their skills.

It can easily be said that "summer is the time of year when all the women who aren't at the beach get undressed anyway and go to the supermarket."

At approximately 1:05 p.m., August 1, officers from Lowell and the Kent County Sheriff's Department apprehended three juveniles at a vacant dwelling at 515 Carol Lynne Drive, after receiving a breaking and entering call. The juveniles were turned over to their parents.

Last Monday, July 29, at 4:10 p.m. two subjects shoplifted a tape player from Lippert's Pharmacy on East Main Street. While being apprehended by store employees, the duo used a type of tear gas to assure their getaway.

Friday, Elmer Guimont, formerly of 3041 Alden Nash Avenue was apprehended by local authorities, for taking indecent liberties with a minor child. Guimont was charged after the juvenile's parents placed a complaint. Guimont was also wanted by the Grand Rapids Police on charges of misdemeanor sex offenses.

Arrested Saturday for forgery were Mr. and Mrs. Shelly Pearce of Lowell, on a warrant issued by the Montcalm County Sheriff's Department. They were assisted in the investigation and arrested by officers from the Lowell Department.

Robert Helmer of 11424-74th Street, Alto, was injured July 31, shortly after 4 p.m., when the motorcycle he was riding struck the side of a car driven by Don Phillips of 609 Lafayette Street, Lowell. According to the Police report, Phillips was making a right hand turn off Main onto Center Street, when the mishap occurred.

A property damage accident on West Main Street last week, involved Linda Lowell of Grand Rapids and Michael Jansma of Lowell. The accident was the result of Jansma failing to stop in the assured clear distance ahead, causing a rear-end collision.

Section 168.906 of the Compiled Laws of Michigan for 1948 as amended states that every Candidate and every Treasurer of a Political Committee shall file with the County Clerk within 10 days after the Primary Election, and again within 20 days after any General Election, a sworn statement of any monies received or disbursed by him in connection with his campaign for nomination or election. Section 168.909 of the Compiled Laws states that upon failure of any candidate to file a statement, the County Clerk shall notify said candidate in writing and that within ten days from receipt of such notice, said candidate shall file his statement in conformance with the Law.

You may have heard of pink elephants but have you heard of red, white, and blue cattle? Well, they may be seen this week at the Kent County 4-H Youth Fair.

A red Hereford, a white Charolais and a blue Angus-cross will be shown by Delores Roseboom and her brother, Walter.

The cattle are painted with an acrylic paint and said to be harmless, according to Gerrit Roseboom, father of Delores and Walter, who said he checked with a veterinarian before applying the patriotic colors.

The 'Blue' Angus and 'Red' Hereford were to be sold at auction Tuesday night but the White Charolais will return home with brighter prospects of becoming a mother next year.

Not to be set aside is the main reason for the fair—the annual exhibit of yearly projects raised, crafted, cooked and grown by 4-H'ers from the ages of nine to 19.

Monday's exhibit entries saw a record number of horsemen bringing their animals in to be judged. Dairy and beef cattle showed a slight increase in exhibit number, with more youth taking part.

The fair, which will end Saturday, August 10, will see a variety of activities finishing out the week-long run. On Thursday, beginning at 9 a.m. the final judging of the horses will be made. At 9:30 a.m. Sections 8, 9 and 10 in Dairy Showmanship will go before the judges.

In the afternoon, at 1:30 an archery tournament will be held; at 2:30, a pet parade will be held on the tennis court, adjacent to the fair grounds, with prizes awarded. Any pet may be entered; no pre-entry is necessary. Youngsters showing pets should be 2 to 13 years of age.

At 7:30, in the evening, the annual 4-H livestock parade will be held, followed by a variety show in front of the grandstands at 8 p.m.

Daytime activities on Friday will include the final judging of all exhibits, plus the payment of premiums.

All 4-H Club members wishing to have their awards published in next week's paper must have their listings in before noon on Monday.

Saturday, at 1 p.m., two bicycles will be given away; the exhibits will be released at 2 p.m., and must be removed by 7 p.m.

The Kent County 4-H Youth Fair is a 'free' fair. There are no entry fees, and no admission or parking charges.

This year, reduced prices on all rides will be offered each day, up until five o'clock in the afternoon.

Child Care Council Meets, Makes Plans

The Child Care Council, the new group formed as a result of the Conference on the Pre-School Child held last April, met Thursday, July 25.

The major goal of founding a new pre-school or a day care center was discussed and more plans laid out. Funding and facilities remain the main problems. Three churches have been contacted but no commitments have been given. Karen Charon, director of East Kent Community Center, is arranging for the CCC members to visit day care centers in Grand Rapids to get ideas on budget needs.

This year, while work goes on to establish a child care program, the CCC will sponsor bi-monthly public programs about children, as a community service.

In September, the program will be helps for day care babysitters, i.e., food ideas and activities for preschoolers in your home. In November, a program on infant behavior and development and how parents can help an infant develop his maximum potential is planned. Watch for announcements of dates, places and times of these programs.

Fun Day Postponed

Saturday, August 3, was supposed to be the YMCA Fun Day at Camp Manitou-Lin. However, because of showers and thunderstorms, it was felt best to postpone this event until Saturday, August 17.

Some of the 48 youth planning to attend could not be telephoned in time and showed up in spite of the rain. But everyone was a good sport and is looking forward hopefully to better weather for the YMCA Fun Day on Saturday, August 17.

Firemen At-Scene Five Hours

Children, playing with matches, were deemed the cause of a fire last Wednesday afternoon at the James Johnston farm on Peck Lake Road, southeast of Lowell.

A barn fire in Lowell Township caused approximately $60,000 damage last Wednesday afternoon at the farm of James R. Johnston, 11420 Peck Lake Rd. SE, according to Lowell Fire Chief Frank Baker.

Mrs. Valerie Johnston said she was working in her garden about 3 p.m. when her 7-year-old son and three of his friends ran to her and said they had accidentally started the blaze while playing with matches. The boys had attempted to put out the flames themselves.

Mrs. Johnston's father, Otto Wierenga, 61, managed to lead two steers, a heifer, a horse and a pony to safety before flames engulfed the hay-laden barn.

"We're still sitting down and figuring our loss," said Mrs. Johnston. "We're just a young couple trying to get going."

Also lost were a tractor and a nearby tool shed. Fire units from Lowell and Alto worked on putting out the flames until 8:30 p.m.

Services Held Monday For Elmer Ellis, 79

Surprises In Herrick Will

Five Museums Receive Rare Glass and Artifacts from Author's Collections, but Greentown Glass Museum, Greentown, Ind., is completely passed over.

By O. Joe Olson

Many important bequests were announced at the public reading in early July of the last will of Dr. Ruth Herrick who lost her life in a motor car collision near Swayzee, Ind., on Sunday, June 9, 1974.

Important glass and rare collectibles were bequeathed to five museums with major gifts to the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Public Museum, the Indianapolis Museum of Art, and a museum at Granville, Ohio.

The Herrick collection of Indian trade beads and trade silver was willed to the National Museum of Ottawa, Canada.

Selection of the most choice Greentown glass in the author's private museum at Lowell was accorded the Indianapolis museum, Dr. Carl J. Weinhardt, director.

After the Indianapolis museum has taken the Greentown pieces it desires, and after other bequests have been fulfilled, all of Dr. Herrick's personal effects, including her collections, will go to Mrs. Sophia Cederquist of Howard City, Mich. She had been Dr. Herrick's friend and confidante since 1931.

The Greentown Glass Museum at Greentown, was not mentioned in the Herrick will, as she had intimated to James F. Hill, a Greentown museum director, in August 1972. Dr. Herrick told Hill at that time she did not plan to give the museum a dime, and she didn't. (She also told him why.)

Dates in the Life of Ruth Herrick, M.D.

1973	July, Retired from medicine
1974	June 9, Killed in car crash June 13, Burial at Granville

Mrs. Cederquist and Gordon B. Wheeler, Grand Rapids attorney, are executors of the Herrick estate.

As to the fatal accident, Dr. Herrick had eaten with George Ball, insurance agent of Chicago and Greentown collector, and Mrs. Ball in Greentown where they had attended a part of the fifth annual glass festival and then Dr. Herrick started the return trip to Lowell, Mich.

Driving east on U.S. 35 into the sun, Dr. Herrick's light compact collided head-on with a car driven by Charles Cook, 29, Marion, Ind. He was attempting to pass a truck traveling west. Cook was reported in Dr. Herrick's lane. It is likely that she failed to see the oncoming car.

Dr. Herrick suffered multiple fractures of the head and chest and died at the scene. Cook was treated and released at Marion General hospital. The crash occurred at 9:10 o'clock Sunday morning June 9.

The body was taken to Grand Rapids where funeral services were conducted. Grave side services and burial were held at Granville, Ohio, June 13.

Dr. Herrick had no immediate survivors. Her father, Dr. C. Judson Herrick, died January 29, 1960, at their home in Grand Rapids. Her mother died a few years earlier. All are buried in the family plot at Granville.

A distant relative was the late Myron T. Herrick (1854-1929), U.S. Ambassador to France during World War I, who greeted Charles A. Lindberg at Orly airport in Paris upon completion of the epochal trans-Atlantic flight in 1927.

How Herrick Found Greentown

By Ruth Herrick, M.D.

In the summer of 1951, two elderly women from Michigan were spending a vacation in Indiana searching for antiques.

We awoke one morning to discover a heavy rain had set in and it looked like it might last all day. There were no shops nearby, so I got out my map looking for something to do that rainy day.

I remembered vaguely the name of a small town on the Cloverleaf Railroad that had been mentioned by J. Stanley Brothers Jr., in a glass sketch in Hobbies magazine.

Looking near Kokomo, I spied the village of Greentown on the map and I recalled what Brothers had written about some unusual and beautiful glass made there by the Indiana Tumbler and Goblet company plant. He had found that from 1896 to the day of the destructive fire in 1903, this glass works had been a prolific contributor to the pressed glass output of the industry in the mid-West.

Apparently no one had given this any attention since the article appeared in June 1939. The village of Greentown had slumbered 48 years in the ashes of its one and only glass works.

Drove to Plant Site

Our memories stirred, guided by the map, a plan for the day emerged. We drove to Greentown, located the former glass plant site and the factory dump pile in an adjacent meadow. A cursory examination of the ground disclosed fragments of clear and colored glass with identifiable patterns, at that time unknown to us.

Driven by an inner excitement, I obtained permission for shallow digging. I was acquainted with the excavating and historical research of a similar kind that Ruth Webb Lee had done as basis for a book on Sandwich glass.

The first visit to the Greentown plant site started a chain process for me. I returned three or four times each summer for the next eight years, obtaining large paper sacks filled with earth encrusted shards to be washed, studied and classified during the winters.

The townspeople displayed only mild curiosity in my activities. Apparently they attributed the pastime to a harmless form of insanity, as there was no known reason for an adult to spend so much time digging up broken glass bits that had no market value.

Studied Pattern Glass Literature

Then came a painstaking search of all pattern glass literature. Some patterns I found named by Stanley Brothers, Ruth Webb Lee and, later, Minnie Watson Kamm. Many were not identified.

Accompanying this was a steady buying of whole dishes and glass objects which seemed related to the old glass factory.

At this time I was living in Grand Rapids where I practiced medicine from 1931 to 1961. My father, Dr. C. Judson Herrick, retired professor of neurology at the University of Chicago, was living with me. I recall that my ceaseless washing of glass shards wore on my father's patience and one day he asked, "Why in the world, when you don't want to wash your own dishes, do you want to wash everyone else's?"

Of course, it was all in the name of research and to establish some facts.

As Greentown collectors and students are aware, the results of this work were threefold: I established a private museum in Lowell, Mich. to share my Greentown glass and fragments with students and others. The work served as basis for my book, "Greentown Glass," published in 1959. And the good people of Greentown, apparently realizing the importance of their "old cheap glass," set up a modest museum to show some glass.

Herrick on Late Chocolates

By Ruth Herrick, M.D.

My book on Greentown glass has had four printings. If I were planning an immediate revision or enlargement, I would surely write something further on late patterns not poured at Greentown, for much confusion continues in this area. Perhaps this article in our Greentown newsletter may help to settle some questions.

The confusion springs from a statement in print many years ago that all chocolate glass was made at Greentown, Ind., except for a few pieces at the Fenton factory. Collectors and dealers were conditioned to this conclusion.

Chocolate in New Patterns

However, then chocolate glass items began to be found in patterns unknown to the residents of Greentown. Also, in nearly ten years of excavating and studying shards from the site of the former plant dump, I had found no pieces with these patterns. The new items included chocolate lamps, dresser sets, hatpin holders and many other pieces in new patterns.

Collectors concluded that the chocolate sauce dish in the Northwood Geneva pattern was from Greentown and for that reason the identical dish in custard glass had to come from Greentown also. This error appeared in advertising and no one contradicted it although it simply was not true. Geneva chocolate was not poured in Greentown but by Rosenthal for Northwood at Wheeling, W. Va. The custard, of course, was made by Northwood in his own plant.

After the consuming fire of June 1903, Jacob Rosenthal made a living for himself and family by mixing and pouring his secret formula chocolate at several glass plants.

Farm Program Rules Changed

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has further liberalized the requirements for enrolling in the 1974 Wheat and Feed Grain Programs. This statement was released by Walter Wittenbach, Chairman of the Michigan State Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee.

The deadline date of July 15 has been extended. The change in policy now provides for what might be termed an open end enrollment period. For those producers who have not yet enrolled and who wish to qualify for the price support loan as their crops are harvested, they have the option of certifying to their crop acreage and enrolling at the time they apply for their loan. Those producers who may qualify for a low yield payment where natural weather conditions may affect their production, have until 15 days following completion of harvest to certify their crop acreage and if it becomes apparent because of substantial reductions in prices received at the market for program crops that deficiency payments may be made, producers with wheat and feed grain allotments would have until November 1 to certify their crop acreages.

Wittenbach noted that in spite of the intensive campaign by county offices to inform producers of the features of the new farm program, many still do not understand the significance of signing up and certifying their crop acreages this year. In Michigan as of July 15, 62,327 farms were enrolled out of approximately 85,000 that were eligible. In order to give producers the benefit of any doubt and every opportunity to participate, the final certification date and the rules on preserving allotment history were changed.

Blanch Cauliflower

For pure white cauliflower, shield the heads from the sun when they reach two to three inches in diameter. Pull the larger leaves of the plant over the developing heads and fasten them with twine or rubber bands. This process, called blanching, will prevent the heads from discoloring and developing an odd flavor.

You don't have to blanch if you have planted a purple, green or self-blanching variety of cauliflower. The heads are ready for harvest when they are about six inches in diameter, compact and completely white. If the weather has been hot, they will reach this stage within three or four days of blanching. If the weather is cold, the heads may take eight to twelve days to reach harvest readiness.

Don't leave the heads covered by the leaves too long. The covering leaves will rot and discolor the head.
