Fairy Castle Sent To Mary Free Bed

The fairy castle built by the children of Mrs. Grace Hammond's first grade at Martin school last year has finally found its destination at Mary Free Bed in Grand Rapids. This project, which took two or three months to complete, is bringing great happiness to the children there.

During the last summer the castle was used as the centerpiece at the Grand Rapids Museum for their Fairy Story Hour creating a wonderful atmosphere for the stories told.

It was again on display at the museum during the past Holiday season in a unique setting of real scotch pine trees, a little snow mountain made of cotton on which the fairy castle was placed. In the foreground were a little fawn, a skunk and a bear.

Because of the interest shown in the exquisite nature of the castle, Mrs. Hammond was asked to appear on "This Amazing World" WOOD-TV in behalf of her pupils to explain how and what their building was made. At that time she told that the castle was made of cereal and cheese boxes, paper rolls with tomato boxes used for gates. The children brought various jewels, broken necklaces and Christmas tree ornaments which made up the beautiful outside walls.

Senator Potter reports

. . . the latest news from Washington of special interest to Michigan . . .

Veterans—over 22 million of them—will cheer the good news that my proposal for a permanent standing Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs has received a significant forward push.

The Chairman of the powerful Rules Committee informs me that he is polling every Committee chairman in the Senate for comments and reactions to my resolution. In the meantime, the Rules Committee itself is actively studying the proposal and asserts that when the fourteen chairmen have reported, public hearings may be held. The Rules group then will hammer out a decision.

Until now, the Rules Committee has been standing on a dime. This is the first solid action in the direction of a Senate Veterans Committee since the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

Over a year ago, when I introduced the resolution, I pointed out that veterans' problems had been getting second-class treatment. The same holds true today. The House of Representatives does have a Veterans Affairs Committee, but the Senate tosses veterans' matters to two already overworked Committees, Finance and Labor and Public Welfare.

What happens when the Finance Committee is swamped with tax bills and debt matters, as it is today? What happens when Labor staggers under massive new education and union proposals, as it does at this very moment? Obviously, with the best intentions in the world, these two Committees can only give veterans' bills hit-or-miss attention, often shelve them.

Almost half the population of the United States consists of veterans, their dependents and relatives. This patriotic community of Americans is entitled to a Senate Committee to devote exclusive attention to its unique problems. On the other hand, the taxpayer is entitled to know also that veterans benefits, the largest single item in our civilian budget, receive full and careful scrutiny by such a Committee.

Under my resolution, the Senate Veterans Committee would consider legislation covering pensions, life insurance, compensation, vocational rehabilitation, education, veterans' hospitals, medical care, civil relief and readjustment of service men to civil life, housing, and all other matters relating to veterans.

The tense world situation requires us to keep our military establishment strong and vigorous. Millions of American men and women, therefore, are being fashioned into veterans every day. Their problems deserve understanding, generous, and above all prompt treatment by the Senate.

I am delighted that my repeated urgings and remarks on the floor of the Senate during 1957 and early 1958 have at last sparked action. Most recently, in my letter of January 10, I reminded the Rules Committee that the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Amvets and Disabled American Veterans have all expressed enthusiastic support for such a standing Senate Committee. I am looking forward to working with these groups—and all veterans—toward making the Committee a reality.

Best wishes.

CHARLES E. POTTER,
United States Senator

Boy Scouts, on 48th Birthday, Begin National Safety Good Turn

OFFICIAL BOY SCOUT WEEK POSTER

More than 4,700,000 Cub Scouts, Boy Scouts, Explorers, and adult leaders throughout the nation will observe Boy Scout Week, February 7 to 13, marking the 48th anniversary of the Boy Scouts of America.

Boy Scout Week sees the launching of a yearlong Safety Good Turn suggested by President Eisenhower, Honorary President of the Boy Scouts of America.

In cooperation with other organizations giving leadership in safety, the Scouts will promote traffic safety in March, April, and May; outdoor safety in June, July, and August; and home safety in September, October, and November.

Daylight Hours To Grow Longer During January

January days will lengthen by an hour over the shortest day of December (21st), but don't expect warmer weather yet, warns a University of Michigan astronomer.

Longer hours of sunshine will make no mark on the weather until rate of the earth's heating overtakes its rate of cooling, about the beginning of February, observes Hazel M. Losh, associate professor in the U-M Department of Astronomy.

As for the January nighttime skies, we can expect a good view of most of the nine planets, she says.

Morning skies in January will shine with planets, mainly Venus, which has been appearing as the evening star in southwestern skies. Venus is moving rapidly toward the Sun, will pass it and emerge in the southeast as a morning star near the end of the month Professor Losh Explains.

It may be possible to follow Venus' crossover with the unaided eye to within three days of its conjunction with the Sun, on January 28. Venus appeared close to the crescent moon on the evening of the 20th, she said.

Other planets and where to look for them are:

Mercury: visible in the morning southeastern sky during the middle and latter half of January.

Jupiter: rising around midnight by the middle of the month, it will remain the outstanding object in the eastern morning sky, located close to the moon about January 13.

Mars: the red planet, will rise about two-and-a-half hours before the Sun just north on another red star, Antares in the constellation Scorpius.

Saturn: a brighter planet, near Mars and the waning moon.

Uranus, Neptune and Pluto: the remaining planets are also on hand, but much fainter and more difficult to detect. Earth is the ninth planet.

Leo is the constellation to watch for in January, climbing over the horizon just a little north of east around 8 p. m., Professor Losh declares. It resembles a sickle, or what she likens to a reverse question mark.

Warm Colors Can Brighten Your Home

We need more warm and mellow colors in house and garden to dramatize the drab winter appearance of the landscape in Michigan, says Harlow O. Whittemore, chairman of the Department of Landscape Architecture at The University of Michigan.

"In the dull winter months, it's important to give some consideration to the material and color of the house as part of the garden scene," says Professor Whittemore. "If there isn't any snow to brighten up the landscape, and if it's cloudy too, things can get to looking pretty dreary.

"You won't be able to get color in flowers and fruit for several months, but you can get it in the material used in your house and walks, and in the fences.

"The house is a good place to start. Paint your house, not a pure white but a warm yellow or a warm brown or a good red. Don't use gray or gray-white. It will look cadaverous against the snow."

Is yours a ranch house? Says Professor Whittemore. "The color of the roof of a ranch house is a very important matter because it's low and easily seen. If your house is a nice rosy brick, you can use a more neutral tone for the roof. If your house is dark-red, use a light colored roof.

"And if you're wondering how to get the blacks and grays needed to give the whole picture dramatic emphasis, you can get it in fence posts and trees," he concludes.

Beef raisers who haven't sprayed their cattle for lice can still do the job, say Michigan State University beef specialists. Do the job during the forenoon on a sunny day when the temperature is above freezing. Keep windows and doors of the barn open after cattle are sprayed.

Look For Quality When Buying Coat

Choose wisely if you're buying a coat during the winter coat sales. A well-chosen coat can be worn for several seasons, according to Lola Belle Green, extension specialist in clothing at Michigan State University.

Coats of good quality have many hidden values in materials, cut and workmanship. Imported fabrics of scarce fibers often cause the coat to be more expensive. Equally good looking and durable coats are available in less costly domestic materials.

This year dressy coats differ from coats for general wear more in fabric than by line. The dressy coats tend to have a soft or polished look. Often fabrics are blends of wool with cashmere, precious fur or perhaps nylon. These are lovely but may not stand hard wear like all purpose wools such as the tweeds. Present day tweeds are very fashionable and are really good buys for general purpose wear.

Soft fabrics are apt to pick up lint. This is often noticeable when you're looking at coats on the rack. And some materials wrinkle easily. If the coat has definite wrinkles from hanging in the store, it will probably require frequent pressing to keep it looking nice.

A well-made coat keeps its good appearance and shape after long wear and many cleanings. Even outside stitching in well matched thread is an indication of good workmanship. Look for buttonholes that are cut with the grain of the fabric. Off-grain buttonholes will stretch out of shape and hang open with use.

Million Residents Now Buying Fluoridated Water

More than a million Michigan residents are now drinking flouridated water, according to the Michigan Department of Health.

Figures listed in the latest issue of the department's magazine, "Michigan's Health," show that six Michigan cities began flouridating their water in 1957, bringing the number of Michigan communities flouridating to 58.

Adjusting the flouride content of drinking water to one part of flouride for every million parts of water reduces tooth decay by two-thirds among children who consume the water from birth. Some of the flouride becomes a part of the child's teeth while they are being formed, and the flouride increases the resistance to decay throughout the child's life.

According to the state health department, water flouridation costs 10 cents per person annually. This cost, the department explained, is more than offset by the reduction in dental bills brought about by flouridation.

The department added that flouridation works its benefits without causing undesirable side effects in persons of any age.

WHAT'S IN A NAME

To Bill Shakespeare's question "what's in a name?" almost every manufacturer of consumer brand products has just one answer. Nearly everything.

In this year of new consumer caution and hotter competition for the consumer dollar, a prime goal of almost every marketing program is consumer confidence in the brand name. Big time manufacturers don't risk established brand names on a product unless they're pretty confident of consumer acceptance.

Young pigs start needing extra nutrients for proper growth and development at about four weeks of age, say Michigan State University swine specialists. They recommend that a good creep ration be made available to the pigs.

The world would be a better place and more would be accomplished if we stopped talking about other people.

U. S. Education Sound, Reports MSU President

The rise of Russia's Sputniks does not signal a drastic overhauling of the American educational system, declared President John A. Hannah of Michigan State University.

President Hannah denied the need for major educational changes to be made just because "the Soviet Communists have proved themselves more ingenious—or more industrious—in one particular field of activity."

"Our graduates," he reminded, "are the men and women who have helped to develop world leadership in science and technology, to give us the highest standard of living ever known and to produce the atom bomb."

"Higher education," he added, "bears only an indirect responsibility, if any, for the predicament in which we find ourselves. This situation developed out of military, political and economic factors over which higher education had little or no direct influence."

For years, Dr. Hannah pointed out, leaders in higher education have been warning the American people that we are in a technological and scientific race with Russia, "but, aside from educators and the Russians themselves, few people believed it."

The clamor for more scientific education for larger numbers of our young people, he said, is not a criticism but a "resounding vote of confidence in American higher education. It is to their colleges and universities that the people are turning in this hour of need."

President Hannah made four suggestions for the future course of education:

1. Elimination of non-essential work for students and faculties; 2. Increased study of other cultures and languages to promote world understanding; 3. Expanded adult education programs; and 4. Improved cooperation in maintaining high standards between colleges and the secondary schools which send them graduates.

The M. S. U. president likened the launching of the first Sputnik to the discovery of America in its importance. Both events, he pointed out, "opened up great new vistas of hope, lengthened man's outreach and gave him great new territories to explore and exploit."

In the face of new dangers and responsibilities, he added, higher education must maintain well-balanced programs which include the social sciences, the humanities and fine arts and seek always the "unchanging" fundamental principles, both in science and morality.

Finally, President Hannah warned, we dare not go to sleep when we get a bigger and better satellite into orbit. The struggle for survival in which we are engaged will go on and on until people decide between our philosophy and that of the Communists.

Plastic Bags Help In Transporting Fish

The Plastic Age is aiding sportsmen in a new way. Polyethelene bags have been used with excellent success to transport young fish from hatcheries to streams.

The fish are placed in bags partly filled with water; these are set in cardboard boxes, and the bags then filled with oxygen.

In one experiment, Ohio conservation officials shipped 500 pike fry in these cheap, convenient boxes. The trip took nearly 30 hours and only three fry died.

"Most of the stumbling blocks people complain about are under their hats."

Lady driver to friend: "The thing I dislike most about parking is the noisy crash."

Martha Stiff to Be Exchange Student

Martha Stiff, left, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cary P. Stiff of Ada, has been selected to be Lowell's exchange student abroad next summer. She was chosen by a committee consisting of several Lowell high teachers and last year's exchange student, Joan Bishop. Martha Verspoor right, will be her alternate. The one chosen is always a junior so that on returning in her senior year, she will have time to relate her experiences to the community.

The judges which selected Martha include Mrs. Patricia Mullen, Miss Julia Herrick, Norman Gotschall, Mrs. Anna Mae Roth, Orion Thaler, Stephen Nisbet, Mrs. Esther Lampen, Kenneth Williams and Joan Bishop. This committee made their choice on the basis of the following. The applicant's ability to adapt to different conditions; human understanding; outgoing personality, curiosity and responsibility; scholastic ability and the candidate's desire to participate in the American Field Service program.

The other juniors who applied were Kay Snow, Jane VanderVeen and Martha Wittenbach. The committee felt they had a difficult decision to make because of the fact that these students were all equally qualified.

Mrs. Mullen commented that she thought Martha Stiff mixes with people easily and that she would have no trouble in conversing on almost any subject.

Martha is eagerly looking forward to next summer. She says, "Not only am I eager to learn about the country which I shall visit, but I will also remember that I am a representative of my school, community and nation. I want to promote better friendship between the United States and other people."

After she submits her final application to the American Field Service in New York City, she will be notified of what country she will visit and her summer family.

Finances

Some fund-raising campaigns will be started shortly to help Martha finance her trip. The cost will amount to about $525 which covers expenses from the boat to her destination and return. The family that she stays with will pay for her food and other essentials when she is there.

What is AFS?

The American Field Service program began about eight years ago in 1950. That year nine teenagers were sent to France for the summer. Last year 2,809 exchange students were sent from the U. S. to 20 nations all over the world.

The purpose of AFS is to further international understanding and friendship by the exchange of ideas and by the sharing of good times together.

Each town that brings a student "ambassador" to the U. S. may send one back in return. Jens Yde represents Denmark this year under the plan. This particular program has been going on here for the past two years sponsored by the Lowell Rotary Club.

Busy Fingers Sewing Club Has 1st Birthday

The Busy Fingers Sewing Club celebrated its first birthday Wednesday. The Club, which was formed January 29, 1957, meets each week at a different home, every member taking her turn acting as hostess to the group. They began with eight, but are hoping to expand. (The more, the merrier, they claim.)

Their working fund, used for charity, is obtained by sales of different kinds. During the year, they held a rummage sale and sold home-baked goods, also a pre-Christmas sale of toys, cards, housewares and clothing. From the money received, they donated candy to the emergency ward of Butterworth Hospital; the rest of the money was allotted to the Mary Free Bed Children's Hospital, as their charity project. The members mended for them and worked to supply a gift of money.

The group and their families had a Christmas potluck dinner together and a gift exchange on December 22. Names will be drawn to determine secret pals for 1958 on February 13.

Elections are held every three months in order for everyone to take an equal part in activities. At the present time they are Mrs. Hanna Fallstrom, president; Mrs. Sylvia Ward, treasurer; and Mrs. Ila Ward, secretary.

Students Rebel Against Church If It's a Chore

Despite a "rise in religious feeling" called prevalent in the United States today, Director Harold Duerksen of The University of Michigan's Office of Religious Affairs finds that only a very small proportion of college students shows an active interest in religion.

General disinterest, he explains, may stem from several factors: 1) release from past religious ties; 2) desire to avoid involvement in demanding associations; 3) doubt in one's religious belief; 4) conformity to group feeling; 5) plain laziness.

One of the main reasons students—underclassmen in particular—aren't concerned about religious affairs, Rev. Duerksen explains, stems from a natural rebellion against home pressures where religion was made a chore for them.

Such students may even make a serious effort not to take up religion after they have finished school, he believes.

Much disinterest in religion, he continues, comes from annoyance or confusion in the students' minds about the church. Perhaps they have felt the church's handling of current problems—such as the segregation issue—has been inadequate. Or else they may feel confused about trying to reconcile old religious doctrines with new beliefs and standards of conduct acquired in schools.

Many students fail to realize, Rev. Duerksen explains, that there are many University counselors trained to help students deal with religious problems.

With many other students, he contends, the decision to take an interest in religious affairs is largely determined by the norms of their group of friends. If these associates tend to look upon religion as a dull pastime grounded on little evidence for belief, this attitude is bound to influence them.

Rev. Duerksen was interviewed by Susan L. Read, U-M student from Detroit, for The Michigan Journalist, laboratory newspaper of the U-M Department of Journalism.

Dental Health Week Is February 2 - 8

Dental decay is one of the most wide-spread diseases and affects about 95 per cent of the people in Kent County announced Dr. W. B. Prothro, City-County Health Director. Half of all children, he said, have at least one decayed tooth by the time they reach their second birthday. At the age of 17 the average teenager has seven decayed teeth.

Every year the American Dental Association sponsors a Dental Health Week. This year it falls on February 2-8. The West Michigan Dental Society and the Kent County Health Department are working together to promote this Week.

There are, however, preventive measures that help control dental decay. One of them is adding fluoride to the water and another is having fluorides painted on the teeth surfaces of children at certain ages. Topical application of fluorides reduces teeth decay by 40 per cent in children.

This summer topical fluoride application program will be continued in Forest Hills school area, Cedar Springs and Comstock Park. New programs may be started in Kent City, Algoma Township and Walker Township.

On Sunday, February 9 the Kent County Dental Society will present a Television program on dental health featuring a demonstration of a topical fluoride application. Another program on dental health will be presented on February 16.

Dr. Prothro has stressed the importance of these topical fluoride programs in the county where fluoride of the water supply is either impossible or not feasible. This summer program was conducted in 45 counties in Michigan this past summer, with 33,000 children receiving the 4 applications that make up the series.
