Serving Lowell Area Readers Since 1893

August 24, 1983

WEATHER ALERT

The skies over Lowell last Sunday threatened severe weather... perhaps a tornado. In an effort to warn residents of an approaching tornado if one had formed, about 20 Lowell Reserve Police Officers and Lowell Volunteer Firemen "took to the hills" with their radios. The volunteers were on the lookout for funnel clouds and maintained their vigil for about three hours. Luckily none were sighted, but it's comforting to know that we were being watched over. If a funnel cloud had been sighted, a steady blast would have sounded on the city siren

CABLE READY FOR EASTGATE AND KEY HEIGHTS

Officials from the Lowell Cable Television Department have annouced that residents of Eastgate in the Woods and Key Heights Trailer Park are now fully serviced by the Lowell cable system. Residents in these areas wishing to sign up for the service are reminded that signing up and paying prior to Friday, September 2 will save them the $20,00 hook up charge. Those signing up after that date will have to pay the full cost of hook-up.

COMPLAINS ABOUT THE LEDGER

We just had a visit from Mrs. Henry Tichelaar. She wanted to let her subscription to the Ledger lapse, because as she put it, "there's no news in it, just the front and back page and the cable TV guide." We thought Mrs. Tichelaar was all wet, but just to make sure, we thumbed through last week's Ledger to see just what was in it. We found a bit more than Mrs. Tichelaar indicated; city news, school news, news about 4 Hers at the fair, news about power outages, a story about the hit & run incident that my have informed the Lowell citizen who eventually spotted the suspect's car here. The news went on and on. McPherson speaking here, a story about a handicapped canoe race, an Alto girl won a writing contest, news about a big golf tournament at Deer Run. And that wasn't all, there were births, deaths, anniversaries, birthdays, legal notices, columns, news about service men and women, church news, news about the YMCA, the Library, and an upcoming St. Judes Bike-a-thon here. There was also a list of coming events and even a picture and story about a young man with a fish he was pretty proud of. And speaking of being proud...well I guess we're pretty proud of the Ledger too. It may not be the biggest paper in the world, but it's the only newspaper in Lowell. Michigan, and we're doing our best to keep our readers informed, while at the same time trying to keep this ninety year old rag in the black. Not an easy task in today's economy and competition. We're sorry to disagree Mrs. Tichelaar, but for $6.50 a year, we think you're getting a helluva bargain.

Lowell Police nab hit & run suspect

Responding to a tip from a Lowell resident, Lowell Police officers and troopers from the Michigan State Police Ionia Post arrested Benjamin Acosta, 26, of Lowell, thought to be the driver of the vehicle that killed Linda Feuerstein on August 6. A car matching the description of the hit and run vehicle was spotted in the municipal parking lot in the 200 block of Lowell's Main Street and was reported to Lowell Police at about 11:30 P.M. Saturday Officer Jim Valentine responded, and determined that the car probably was the suspect

State Police, and "sat on the car" until Lowell Reserve Police Officers and the State Police arrived to assist in the arrest. Acosta was apprehended in the parking lot when he came out to see why police were investigating his car.

Acosta, a migrant worker, was living in an apartment above one of the store buildings in the 200 block at the time of his arrest. Acosta was arrested on two warrants from about this time last year. The Ionia county warrants were for aggravated assault was arraigned on both warrants then drove off, according to wit-Monday, and a $10,000 cash assurity bond was set on each. A warrant has not yet been issued by Ionia County Prosecutors for the Feuerstein death, but a manslaughter charge is expected.

Feuerstein, 27, and her husband Steven, 30, both of Smyrna were riding their motorcycle north on White's Bridge Road south of Smyrna when a car crashed into them from behind. Linda was caught under the car and dragged nearly 1,000 feet before the car stopped and back vehicle. Valentine contacted the and absconding bond. Acosta ed up to dislodge her body, and nesses. Steven was thrown to the shoulder of the road and injured in the incident which took place at about 5:00 P.M. in clear weather and dry road conditions.

> Linda's employer, the Ionia County National Bank posted a $1,000 reward and other money was contributed to bring the total reward to around $1,400. Lowell Police Chief Barry Emmons says that he expects the Lowell resident who supplied the tip will get People like Harry Houdini, Evil Knievil (that spelling is just a guess) and "The Flying Wallendas" were all paid very well for their daring stunts. But you don't have to go to a fair or the circus to see people taking crazy chances with their lives. All you have to do is keep your eyes open, and you'll see'em all around you. Some of the fatal accidents that have happened around the state of late are proof that these thrill seekers sometimes pay the price for their fun, but they keep on performing for us anyway.

If you live around Lowell and drive a car, you know how difficult it is to sneak out onto Main Street from a downtown side street. This task is especially difficult if there is a big bread truck parked on the corner, which seems to be the case about half the time. One of the performances I saw recently happened as I was trying to make a left turn onto Main from North Broadway. I looked and looked as I snuck out onto Main Street little by little. I was trying to gain visibility around a camper parked on the corner. Finally, I figured I could see to the east far enough, and gunned it.

Out of nowhere came a clown on a motorcycle doing at least double the posted limit of 25 miles per hour. If I had panicked, and hit the brakes. I'd have been wearing him on the side of my car. But between our maneuvers, we somehow managed to miss each other. I watched in my mirror as this guy kept right on going west at the same speed, weaving through the slower traffic at the Hudson Street intersection. A clear case of more guts than brains there

I saw another thrill show in Florida last winter when a young fellow was attempting to get airborne in a hang glider by being towed by a boat. There were dozens of us on the beach watching ready. I didn't question his method or equipment, as I'm sure he had done this before. But, being a sailor, and having an awful lot of respect for wind. . I sure as heck questioned the conditions, as this guy was facing about a thirty knot breeze.

Everything ready, the boat gunned its engine and he went straight up to an altitude of about 200 feet. When he cut loose of the tow rope, the wind was so stiff that his little craft was literally pushed up into a stall position, flipped over and sent plummeting to the ground in a steep dive. We all held our breath, just waiting for the guy to nose dive into the beach. Miraculously, he pulled out at about fifty feet and went hurtling out over the campground behind us. skimming the palm trees as he went. The question then was, "who's camper is he going to hit?". But again, he miraculously had enough altitude to get it into a turn and just make it to the beach on the north side of our little island campground. Evil Knievil never did anything more breathtaking

Another display of a serious lack of gray matter happened just last Sunday. We were at Silver Lake north of Muskegon, the one with the sand dunes. A terrific thunderstorm blew in about noon. The sky was black, and lightning was crackling all around. I was watching the show from cover, and thought I could see something, but couldn't believe it. I went for the binoculars, and sure enough, there were two guys standing at the top of the very highest dune. They couldn't have been better lightning rods if they had tried. I guess it just wasn't their time to go, as I watched them throughout the storm and they came through it without being turned into "Crispy Crit-

So, next time you are tempted to go to some type of thrill show. save your admission price and just drive over and watch the traffic on 28th Street or something

Jack Winks remembers 1927 dam renovation

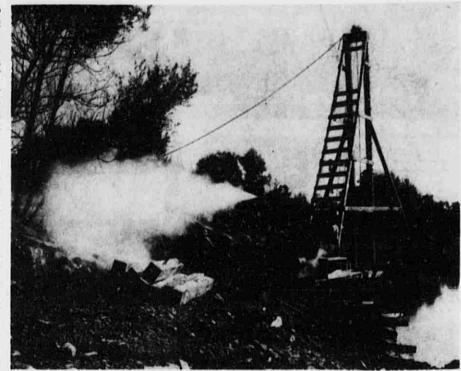

With all the attention given to the renovation of the Fallasburg Dam and Powerhouse lately. Jack Winks of 210 Brook St., Lowell, thought Ledger readers might be interesed in a couple of old photos/from his attic. Jack's father, U.A. (Jupe) Hawk was foreman of a project on the dam in 1927. Jack was only in his teens at the time, and worked on the project as a tool crib attendant, water boy and general "gopher" (go fer this, go fer that). Jack remembers his gopher chores including runs to local moonshiners when the crew was rained off, and a poker game broke out in the work shed.

The dam, originally built in 1896, and was constructed of wooden planks and filled with stones. The 1927 project had a crew of about fifty men building forms and facing all the wood with a concrete skin. The project also called for the driving of a row of wooden piles along the upstream edge of the dam. The top photo is a closeup of the pile driver at work. Hardwood logs about 20 feet long were used as piles. In the bottom photo are piles ready for driving, the tool shed, the pile driver and the dam in the background. Behind and left of the shed, and partially hidden by a tree is the concrete bucket. The one yard bucket was mounted on a narrow gauge railway car. Tracks were laid down to the dam. The concrete was mixed by hand, one yard at a

The 1927 renovation project began on August 16, and work was completed on December 21. Jack remembers that an electrician was killed on the project when running a live power line and touched the ground with one
