OOPS!

While typing last week's lead story about a llama show here, yours truly, the editor hastily glanced at the calendar for the weekend dates, entered a time warp, and lost a week. The error got by our sharp-eyed proofreader too, and ended up top-center on our front page. We've all put the wrong date on a check, or missed an appointment because of an erroneous glance at the calendar, but to publish a news story with the dates a whole week off. . . well, that can make one's face plenty red. We hope that our readers were able to understand our blunder and not think that the show had already passed. One positive side to a mistake such as this is that we find out that people really do read our paper. If we had a nickel for every call we received about the error, we could take the whole staff to lunch.

If you happen to see me out and about this week, you will likely notice something different about my appearance. No, I haven't lost right? So, how should a person enjoy a beautiful summer day? Well.

After helping push a power boat off from the beach, I realized that I had left my life jacket on the boat's bow. I began to sprint the six or seven strides necessary to retrieve my life jacket, but about halfway there I stepped in a hole that was obscurred by a foot or so of water. I I didn't want to look at my foot. I didn't want help. I considered rolling off into deeper water, and ending it there.

When witnesses on the beach rushed out to offer help, I heard one of them say, "Wow! Look at his ankle!" I was still on my hands and knees trying to decide if I dared to look at it. After a few moments I finally gathered enough courage to have a peek. My ankle appeared to have somehow swallowed a baseball. I was loaded onto a power boat with my ankle wrapped in ice from somebody's cooler, and

On the way to the hospital emergency room I was already thinkng of things that I could do to while away the summer with a cast on my foot. Somehow the prospects of a summer spent reading, watching soaps, knitting and gathering signatures on my cast did not ex-doctor returned to give me the news. "Your X-rays are normal." he said. I could have jumped for joy, and I would have, except it's pretty difficult to get my bulk aloft with just one leg. I contented myself with sitting in my wheelchair with a big grin on my face. The doctor said I would be hobbling for two to four weeks, but that sounded like a pardon from the governor compared to the prospects

So, when you see me gimping around town on crutches you'll know what happened. If I am asked what happened, I'll know that person didn't read this column, and I can go to work selling them a subscription. I've got to pay for those X-rays, doctor fees, Councilman Thompson then turned the meeting back over to Mayor Maatman who then opened the Public Hearing on the 1985-86 Proposed Budget.

There were no questions from the audience.

Under Citizen Input and Suggestion, Mrs. Pauline Wittenbach asked about the yellow lines on M-21 in front of the Cyrstal Flash Mall being gone, and its being extremely difficult to tell (9) where the separte lanes are, especially at night.

Manager Quada replied that all of Main Street, or M-21, is under the jurisdiction of the Michigan State Highway Dept. and just when complaints start coming in such as this, the paint truck goes by five minutes later.

In the next three years, 12 of Campbell's singles climbed to the top of the country and pop charts, among them "Hey, Little One", "Witchita Lineman", "Galveston", and "It's Only Make Believe".

He achieved his third Gold single in 1975 with "Rhinestone Cowboy". It was the only single that year to hit the number one spot on the pop, country easy listening charts. The best-selling album of the same name also contained the top 10 hit "Country Boy" and earned Campbell still another Gold LP.

Another Gold Album was added to Campbell's list in 1977 with "Southern Nights", which brought him three more country and pop hits.

Campbell has also starred in films such as "True Grit", "Norwood" and the made-for television movie "Strange Homecoming". His first television series, "The Glen Campbell Show", ran for four and a half years.

The group, organized in 1961, first hit the charts in 1962 with their first national release, "409" and "Surfin Safari". HEALTH Dr. Paul Gauthier

Heat Stress in the Young Athlete

Many children's sports activities take place during the summer months when fluid balance is an important consideration. This applies not only to small children who are participating in play ground activity for the first time, but also to varsity football players in high school who begin practice during the hot summer months. In today's column we'll discuss recognition and treatment of heat stress in the young athlete.

Enthusiasm for participation in sports, especially "fun runs", has been increasing in the last few years. Many of the participants in these types of events are children and adolescents, both of whom are at greater risk for heat related illnesses. Because children have a greater surface area-to-mass ratio than adults, they tend to produce more metabolic heat and are less able to dissipate it.

The best drink for children participating in sports is pure cold water. The amount of water required will be affected by temperature and humidity. The myth that salt loss during exercise is excessive should be layed to rest. As a rule, a child in the United States who has a normal diet and participates in normal athletic activity has an adequate intake of salt and does not require supplementation. Salt tablets have no place in children's sports. They can cause nausea and vomiting and can easily be overdosed.

The minor heat related disorders to watch for are heat fatigue from overuse and heat cramps or spasms in the skeletal muscles. The two most extreme forms of heat related disorders are heat exhaustion and heat stroke. Heat exhaustion results from excessive loss of fluid during strenuous activity. Symptoms include extreme weakness, headache, dizziness, profuse sweating and vomiting. The child is usually alert and clear-headed and has a normal body temperature. Heat stroke, on the other hand, is a life threatening problem. It usually occurs in active, healthy children who are pushed or who push themselves too hard. It is characterized by an altered state of consciousness ranging from simple confusion to coma. Body temperature is also moderately to markedly elevated (up to 106° F).

When heat cramps occur, the child should be given water and allowed to rest, refraining from exertion for at least 24 hours. When the child suffers from heat exhaustion, the same therapy is adequate-oral rehydration and a cool environment. Heat stroke necessitates immediate hospitalization to reduce core body temperature and to replace fluids intravenously.

Prevention is probably the most important aspect of any heat related disorder, especially heat stroke. Methods of preventing heat stroke include: 1) acclimation to rigorous activity by sound training programs, 2) free access to cold water with encouragement of periodic water breaks, 3) usage of exercise clothing appropriate to climatic conditions. The use of fishnet jerseys, shorts and lightweight shirts should be encouraged. If these few simple steps are taken, heat related disorders in the young athlete can be kept to a
