CHRISTMAS IN LOWELL.

Good Act by the School Children Exercises at the Churches.

The Christmas time of 1898 in Lowell was one long to be remembered.

The first thing and the best of all was the Christmas giving by the school children of the village, under the direction of the teachers, with the help of our business men and people generally; and through the agency of Santa Claus White.

What stacks of groceries, provisions and baked goods there were, and what a quantity of picture books, toys. dolls, etc., for the children; to say nothing of the sleighload of cloth ing of all sorts and sizes,

There was more more than White and his white horse could distribute in one day, so the eatables and gifts for the children were handed out first and the load of clothing will be sorted out and placed where it will do the most good. It is believed that there is not a needy family in this village that was not substantially remembered.

Our business men enjoyed a good trade during the week in spite of unfavorable weather. The mails were crowded with Christmas gifts and some of the packages looked as if the contracting people were present. Barnum's big elephant had stepped on the mail pouch. The express offices were full of packages from distant points; and the people on the streets had their arms full.

> The Christmas exercises at the Methodist and Baptist churches Saturday evening were well attended. Good programs were rendered and gifts for the little folks were numerous and varied.

> The Methodists had a tree and old Santa Claus came driving in with his reindeer and jingling bells.

The Baptists had a Santa Claus home, a very pretty miniature evergreen house, from which old Santa, his wife and children distributed the

The music and exercises were approand Mrs. H. H. Hunter and daughter priate to the occasion and passed off without a hitch. Owing to its being Sunday evening, the Santa Claus element was omitted and the gifts were druggist and grocer. quietly distributed.

The regular services of the several churches on Sunday were well attended; the day was benatiful; and alto gether Christmas 1898 in Lowell will be memorable.

isn't such an everyday occurrence as to pass unnoticed, even in central India, where the doings of the jungle folk are unusually dark and vain, says the New York Herald. Consequently the celebrated trial and punishment of an elephant residing in the vicinity of Mhow form a theme upon which the native loves to dwell. The elephant had killed his keeper. That fact was clearly established. A number of witnesses hore testimony to the manner of the man's death. He had been a native soldler. He and his charge didn't seem to hit it off very well. #### R. D. Stocking's Funny? Experience at.Parnell.

Did you ever hear about the fun(?) that "Dee" Stocking had the last time he went to Parnell to play for a dance?

The dance was in the woods and when the orchestra reached the place, the crowd was there and impatient for the fun to begin. Someone volunteered to take care of the horses and the boys went to work.

About midnight the torch lights began to go out and as there was no gasoline to replenish them the dance had to stop and everybody began hustling to get their teams hitched up and out of the woods before the last torch light gave out.

So "Dee" said to the others: "You get the music and instruments packed up and I'll go after the team."

Here was where the fun began, he could not find the fellow who took the team and had no idea where the horses were. He took the chances on a barn half a mile west; but arrived there only to be informed that they were a mile ast. He was warm under the collar by this time and as- he walked a mile east he made some remarks that wouldn't look well in

The next barn was the right place and "Dee" began feeling around in the midnight darkness without a lantern in a strange barn for his horses. All at once, he fell down stairs and fetched up on his hands and feet in a cow stable. It seems that the floor had not been cleaned for some months and-well, he scraped his hands on the barn timbers and got rid of some of it. He found the horses there checked up, just as they had been taken from the carriage and left there all day and half the night without food or water.

When "Dee" got back to the grove, he was too full for utterance and the observations he made were very empointed and emphatic.

At the Parnell store, one of the boys got some crackers and cheese. When well started for home, he offered a portion to "Dee," who only
