The loose change in your pockets

Will start a bank account. Deposit with this bank and pay your bills by check.
Your check book shows just where your money went and for what purpose. Your money slips away without any trace when you do not keep a record of your receipts and expenditures. A checking account records every item, saves time and trouble. It's a great convenience.
Your checks are returned to you when you have your bank book balanced. You can have it balanced at any time. It should be balanced at least once a month.
The bank does your bookkeeping.

Lowell Industries With Camera and Pencil.

KELLOGG EVAPORATOR, JELLY AND CIDER WORKS.

John Kellogg, owner and proprietor of the Lowell evaporator, employs, each season, from eighteen to twenty hands. During a full season when fruit is plentiful, he uses fifty or sixty thousand bushels of apples. Of these about twenty thousand are used for evaporated fruit and the rest for cider vinegar and jelly.

The industry was established in 1891, and Mr. Kellogg has added to his buildings from year to year, and, though he had a partial loss by fire two years ago manfully "pocketed" his loss and rebuilt larger and better. John is a good man for the town, and a whole lot of people welcome the toot of his whistle every fall.

Lowell Canning Factory Resumed Operations Yesterday Afternoon.

The Lowell canning factory resumed active operations, with about fifty workers, yesterday afternoon in the temporary factory, just one week after the destruction of the old one by fire, as the result of the energy of the owner, Edwin Fallas, the quick action taken by the Board of Trade, and the efficient work of the gang of men and of Mr. Fallas' manager, Geo. M. Parker. The unprecedented feat was accomplished, Mr. Fallas says, because Lowell is the best place in the country to get good help. The crew of men who began work the day of the fire preparing large Tram barn near the race track for a factory for this season, finished yesterday, and the old ticket office in front, though though it is, is being used as an office. The canning work is in full blast, and many more workers are needed.

It has been rumored that defective electric wire might have caused the fire; but this is impossible, as the current was shut off in the factory that night, the electricians having been working there.

QUARTER-CENTURY REUNION SOUTH BOSTON SCHOOL PUPILS.

A company of forty people, pupils of the old South Boston select school of twenty-five years ago with their families, met Tuesday, Aug. 28th, at the Grange hall in that vicinity and organized the South Boston Select School Association, with Mrs. Ed Hunt of Scituate as president. Mrs. Hunt, formerly Miss Eva Smith, was in charge of the institution for a number of years, and is held in high regard by the class. Among the company were Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Cook, of Black Duck, Minn., and the following Lowell people: Messrs. and Mesdames E. O. Wadsworth, J. M. Meyers and Delos Watters.

FRANK SEARS DEAD.

Frank Sears of Grattan died Friday after a brief illness. Mr. Sears was born in Caledonia township 50 years ago and moved to Grattan in 1876. He had many friends in the community in which he lived and his death is mourned by the entire community. His wife died two years ago, but he leaves a son, a brother, Grove Sears of Grattan, and a sister, Mrs. H. L. Brown of Grand Rapids. —Grand Rapids Herald.

A GREAT PLAY.

"The Banker's Child" is pronounced by press, pulpit and public to be one of the best comedy dramas ever written. It is now in its fifth year and has played practically to the same territory all this time, having visited many places five or six times which proves beyond a doubt the merit of the attraction.

Manager Harry Shannon has new scenery painted this season. More comedy is added, while the story remains the same. Little Flossie Perry as Stella, "The Banker's Child," is pronounced by all to be the cleverest child artist before the public. Clever specialties will be introduced. It will be well to secure seats early for this production. At Train's Opera House one night only, Friday, Aug. 31.—Com.

NOVEL BY EDGAR EARL CHRISTOPHER

"I hope you will not judge my loyalty by my words, Mr. Rodin," she said, reproachfully, her beautiful eyes resting upon me.

"How strange it seems," she continued, her eyes looking afar, "that voice low and her face white, that all causes however noble their ultimate purposes are founded upon human desire. That human joy must spring from human weal is inconceivable to me. All nations made great by war, rapine and murder; all kings and rulers, the earth's despots, the rulers of their military organizations or their battalions; all religions, all creeds, all doctrines, social, secular and religious, are tainted with human misery."

"I saw tears hanging tenderly to the long lashes, which in the dim light of the fading day had concealed. She arose, and, offering me her hand, said: "Good-night, Mr. Rodin—and you will forget the words I have said—forget my ingratitude to those—those noble gentlemen. Good-night, Mr. Rodin," and she was gone. I saw her no more that night.

I called the negro, who had returned to his post in the hallway. "Where are the gentlemen who were here to-day?" I asked. "They are gone, Master Rodin," he replied.

I was glad in my heart that Alexander of the Death Committee was gone—but after all, what had I feared—was it not the black of terror—not love—that had fallen upon Marie's face as she touched his hand?

CHAPTER XVIII.

The streets of New Orleans were congested with the shouting, screaming multitude—a sea of human faces, flushed with excitement, or white with fatigue, a cosmopolitan gathering of that many-sided nation—America—which was coming up increasing by the incoming train from all points of the compass. A rainbow of colors, a babel of human sounds, a kaleidoscopic whirl of human forms blockading the streets, choking the passages, ever moving back and forth, always leaving, ever returning, while the glittering pageant of what seemed endless magnificence moved with a great pomp and splendor through the silent sea of humanity, presenting a scene impressive, startling and mysterious, and recalling a vivid picture of ancient splendor.

"Good Night, Mr. Rodin," and she was gone.

London.—One of the pregnant utterances of the late P. T. Barnum, who knew a great deal more of human nature than one can ever learn from books, was to the effect that the world would come to an end before the supply of fools ran short. There was a fresh "sooner," he said, born every minute. So there can be no doubt that Michael Jereel Mills, erstwhile of Detroit, Mich., U. S. A., who has proclaimed himself the Prince Michael foretold by the prophet Daniel, and of the heaven-appointed successor of James Jereel, founder of the Jezreelites, will obtain a following in England.

ROSA'S CONQUEST

By CROTH-HEA DEKIN

Rosa, as a Pierrette, in a full, short white skirt dotted with scarlet pom-poms, with an absurd little perked up hair, was the first to appear. She perched rakishly on her brown hair, ran on with her usual prodigious smiles, and sang to an adoring audience that she was the Rose of all the Rivers—a fact they were quite ready to believe.

"What is to be ashamed of in me?" Rosa asked, shortly. "I always thought I was rather nice."

"No flower of mine," said Rosa, who was once married, "he said, hastily, 'I would be all right. If we

ERRORS ABOUT THE WHITE HOUSE.

The Editor: I noticed somewhere recently—I would not say positively that it was in your columns—an article on the White House which contained several mis-statements.

In the first place it was stated that the White House was first occupied in 1800 and that its first occupant was President Madison. The fact is, its first occupant was President Adams, who took up his residence there in 1800.

THE DAYS OF POWDERED HAIR.

French Nuns Set the Fashion Quite Unwittingly.

The custom of powdering the hair dates back as far as the sixteenth century and was first introduced by the nuns in French convents. Those who had occasion to leave the cloisters for any reason were wont to powder their hair so as to make it appear gray and give them a venerable look. The fashionable dames were so struck with the novel effect of white powder on dark hair that they soon appropriated the device as one of the arts of the worldly toilet. Out of this grew the use of tints in the hair. The Roman women often used blue powder and later, in 1860, Empress Eugenie set the fashion of using gold powder.

Rome, under the empire, and Greece, during the time of Pericles were seized with a mania for golden hair. The belles and fops of the lady devised several methods whereby black locks might be changed to golden yellow, but bleaching did not always succeed. Consequently quite a trade was established with the fair haired tribes beyond the Alps, who sold their locks to Latin merchants, to be worn on the heads of Roman dandies.

Many a dame dampened her raven tresses in the strongest muriatic acid and sat in the sun to bleach her hair to the coveted yellow. Others used lye and afterward anointed their heads with oil made from goat fat, ashes of the beach tree and certain yellow flowers.

The itinerant barber, who passed down and out when people ceased to use powder, in their hair, was quite a personage in his day. He went from house to house, armed with a soap bowl to fit the chin, powder boxes, pomatum and puffs, was always a news-monger and a gratuitous scandal leaver.

When wigs were in vogue the Roman dames had in their wardrobe as many wigs as costumes, and when the choice of a wig was made it was necessary to arrange the eyebrows, lashes and complexion in harmony. It was then that the slaves were specially charged with the make-up of the face, a delicate operation, called by Cicero "Medicaments candoris et ruboris."

There were some cunning devices in vogue among the belles of the Old World for giving of them were wont to place a single drop of that deadly poison, prussic acid, in the bottom of a wine glass and hold it against the eyes for two or three seconds. Or, more rashly still, they would take a small quantity—a piece not larger than a grain of rice—of an ointment containing that mortal drug, atropia, and rub it on the brow. Each of these was supposed to give clearness and brilliancy, expand the pupil and impart a fascinating fullness and mellowness to the eye. Certain slightly pungent and volatile perfumes, such as oil of thyme, were occasionally worn on the handkerchief, causing the eyes to glitter and sparkle. The eye was made to appear large, full and almond shaped by the use of a fine pencil dipped in antimonial sulphur of Egyptian black, rubbed upon the lids along the angle.

But, after all, the surest means by which a woman may acquire and preserve the gift of pleasing is to be young in spirit if not in years and every bit as pretty as is possible with all the legitimate means at her command, if she is always kind and gentle, always ready to give to others the sunniest side of her nature.—Chicago Chronicle.

Loved Her Not.

A little 6-year-old girl friend of mine came running to me and threw herself into my arms, sobbing as if her heart would break.

"God doesn't love me any more," she wailed. "God doesn't love me."

"God doesn't love you! Why dear, God loves every one," I assured her.

"Oh, no, he doesn't love me. I know he doesn't. I tried him with a daisy." —Harper's Bazar.
