I have this day, July 21st., sold my bakery business to Mr. W. R. Schloerke of Niles, Mich.

Mr. Schloerke is a practical business man and a baker. To the people of Lowell and vicinity who have given me their business and contributed so largely to my success I feel grateful, and would ask that they continue to trade with my successor who, I believe will do everything he can to merit their trade and friendship.

Yours truly

CHAPTER I.

I never quite knew how it was that I took Vincent with me, except that we pealed to us both. Vincent's whole ham said there were public links a shame not to give such a promising name and title is Lord Wilfred Vincent, for he is the younger son of the old dake of Totten. Men of his own age call him "Freddy," but I call him Vincent or Wilfred, because 1 consider curtailed appeliations undignified. Vincent is an artist-that is, he calls himself one; his friends call him "a dabbler in art." He doesn't really go in for it seriously, you know, but he did little sketches of cows and that sort of thing rather well, I fancy. So we agreed that our aim was to find a little old village, far away from London, and get rooms in some old farmhouse. My idea was that Vincent would go out and paint the cows while I would lie in the hammock and the old lady would bring me buttermilk. Wilfred had an idea that he, too, would like to spend a good bit of his time in a hammock, but with this difference, that the old lady's beautiful daughter was to bring him lemonade.

The next day when Harvey Jones came to drive the cow away, Mrs. White ran upstairs and threw her apron over her head to shut out the sight.

However, when Dolly bawled in loud protest as she was driven through the yard, her mistress could stand it no longer, but rushed to the window, and called out after the retreating horseman: "Mr. Jones! Mr. Jones! you must promise me to take good care of Dolly. You must, indeed!"

"Stop it!" cried Serena, shrilly. 'Undo the chain!'

At the sound of her voice the poor beast turned its head as far as the chain would permit and bellowed piteously.

Serena White felt her heart go out in pity toward the poor creature as she looked at it, then the next moment she suddenly gave a loud cry almost as piteous as the beast had uttered: "Dolly!"

At the name, the forlorn animal struggled once more to gain a foothold on the dank floor.

THE independent press is every-where domanding a decent campaign, devoid of mean personalities. If friends and neighbors of all political faiths will agree to disagree, to respect each other's opinions and to acknowledge the equal patriotism of all, there will be few regrets after the people have given their verdict next November. This we know: The will of the majority will control and the minority must submit. It is the part of the good citizen to do his duty as he sees it, and in the end to submit cheerfully to the result. This applies to all men and to all parties, no matter what the result. Let us not forget that a man may be so good a partisan as to be a pesky mean citizen. This tearing down of banners, assuming an air of superior knowledge and indulging in disloyal talk in event that "our stde loses," is all poor business. These fellows refused to do business. "Turn the rascals out." If a man insists on standing up for the trusts and corporations, he has no business drawing public money for mis-represent-ing the people. Turn him out!

JUDGE GROSSCUP'S decision remit-ting Judge Landis' $29,000,000 fine of the Standard Oil company reminds us of the fellow who was tried for stealing a pig. He acknowledged taking the pig but the jury acquitted him. Asked how he managed it, the thief replied: "Each of the jurors had some of the pork." Grosscup's court may be honest enough; but who got the pork?

WE HOPE the great Rain Maker will turn his attention toward Lowell pretty, soon. Potatoes will be small in Maumee, if he doesn't get busy pretty soon.

THE defeat of the Administration's case against the Standard Oil company, will probably figure largely in campaign discussions.

I can't call myself an old settler for when I first entered Lowell I was nearly twelve years old and the time of the entry was June 1853. During the next succeeding eight years 1 became familiar with Lowell, every fishing hole on both rivers, every cow-path that led to the village, and some of the neighbors used to think I was tolerably familiar with their mel n patches. Of course, it did no good to deny it then, any live boy was ex-pected to deny, but now after more than helf a century has past it will than bal' a century has past, it will not be out of place for me to say I nev-er stole a melon in my life, and further er stole a melon in my life, and further I never did many other things in those days with which I was credit-ed. I noticed that some of your cor-respondents have erred a little in some of their details, viz, the "Low-ell House" stood where Dr. McDan-nell's residence now stands.
