At the Musicals.
Miss Critique—There are many accidentals in that piece your daughter is trying.
Daughter's Pop—I hope so. I'd hate to think she's doing it on purpose.

Reasonable.
Baldy—If people go to the opera to show their clothes—
Young Wife—Yes?
Baldy—As I was saying, if people go to the opera to show their clothes I should think some of them would wear more of them than they do.

Tough on the Landlady.
Boarding House Mistress (to dyspeptic)—Way are you talking your medicine after dinner? I thought the doctor told you to take it after meals.
Dyspeptic—I know it, but he said it didn't make any difference as long as I took it on an empty stomach.

WHAT DYSPEPTICS MAY EAT
Shun Products of Frying Pan—Eat Toast in Preference to Bread.
Teat should be eaten in preference to bread, but brown bread is often beneficial. Eat fish, eggs, nourishing soups, and milk pudding should be largely used; spinach, French beans, boiled celery, butter, cream, olive oil, most fruits, except the very acid ones, provided they are stewed but not sweetened too much, will be found to agree with the dyspeptic. There are cases, however, in which certain ordinary dyspeptic articles of food do not suit the patient, who must make up his mind to leave them alone. Potatoes are sometimes productive of indigestion, but not always; they are best baked. Where there is a dyspeptic the frying pan should not be used, as fried foods are the most difficult of digestion. The following is a simple diet table for any one who suffers from dyspepsia due to gastric incompetency.
Breakfast—An egg, toast and butter, tea or a cup of beef tea.
Dinner—Soup, boiled fish with some simple sauce, roast beef or lamb, or chicken, baked potatoes and any vegetable except cabbage. Toast or stale bread. Salad. Fresh fruit or milk pudding.
Tea—Very little meat, bread, a green vegetable, but no potato; stewed fruit or custard.
A Chinese Wedding.
—No talk, no levity, and much crying. The solemnity of a funeral prevails. After the exchange of presents the bride is dressed with much care. A feast is spread upon a table, to which the blessing bride is led by five of her best female friends. They are seated at the table, but no one eats. The most solemn prevails, when finally the mother leads off in a cry the maids follow and the bride echoes in the chorus. Then all the bridesmaids leave the table, and the discolorate mother takes a seat beside the chair of state, where the bride sits. The bridegroom now enters, with four of his best men. The men pick up the three on which the bride sits and, preceded by the bridegroom, form in procession and walk around the room or into an adjoining parlor, signifying that he is carrying her away to his own home. The guests then throw rice at the happy couple.
The Magic of a Smile.
The expression of our face is of so great importance that we must watch it closely so as to give happiness to all around us, but above all to the beloved best. A cross look, a mere frown, has often been the beginning of much bitterness of heart and sorrow between lovers, says Woman's Life. A smile demands no slight an effort, and has such great power. In a woman, especially, charm of expression is everything.

Worse Still.
"My wife is getting to be very nervous," complained Groucher; "she does not seem to know her own mind from one minute to the next." "My wife," said Krutcher, "is the same way. She's as uncertain as the weather." "Huh! Mine's as uncertain as the weather forecaster."

A WELCOME VISITOR
After a slight acquaintance you will always greet a sack of FINE GOLD flour as one of your best friends. It never wears out its welcome. You will be sorry to see it go. Become acquainted at once. This flour will suit your taste.
