FARM BOARD CHAIRMAN SPEAKS Wheat has been a foot ball of politics long enough in the opinion of James C. Stone, new chairman of the Federal Farm Board. The wheat farmers themselves are coming East Main Street, Lowell, Michigan. Entered to that conclusion, Mr. Stone believes. He at Postoflice at Lowell, Michigan, as Second has returned from a visit to Kansas and Oklahoma confident that the farmers this year will heed the advice that acreage should be curtailed in the interest of better prices, and that the farmers are more and more inclined to cooperation and cooperative marketing. Reports from Kansas, the greatest wheatgrowing state in the union assert emphatically that the new chairman of the Farm Board made a favorable impression on his Western trip and that the attitude of the farmers generally is more favorable toward the board, F Of Rayon and Broad-The Lowell Ledger, established June, its advice and its operations than it was a 1893, by Frank M.
