One of the most important squares in Paris as far as history is concerned is the Place de la Bastile. It obtained its name from the femous fortress built by Chas. V in 1370, later it served as a prison, It was seized by the populace during the French Revolution on July 14, 1789 and in 1790 was burned to the ground. The column in the center of the square is called Colonne de Juillet and is over 154 feet high. Its foundations contain sepulchral vaults with the remains.

On these pages they find the names of fellow townspeople, often their own. So besides the ordinary interest of nation-wide news, this newspaper offers the even greater reader-interest of local community doings.

"I sold mine by Telephone before the drop

THE farmer with a telephone has a big advantage when it comes to selling what he produces. And buying what he needs.

Is the price of wheat up today? What are they paying for fancy broilers? How are hogs doing? Will the cost of fertilizer go up or down? What are they quoting eggs at today?

The telephone can get you the answers - can get them quickly and cheaply. It can help you to buy when prices are low, and sell when prices are high. In just one business deal, the telephone can save or make more money for you than the service costs for many months.

Haunted House

By HAROLD O'BRIEN © McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

MARIAN parked her car at the edge of the road, pushed her way through the hedge, and walked clowly up and across the sloping lawn and garden to the house. The lawn was not just a stretch of grass. Along the road there were shrubs and trees, making a little narrow woodland, which seemed to be planted with the wild growth that belonged there. Away at the left a noisy, shallow little brook, bedded on flat brown stones, was shaded by more trees and shrubs. And on the small rise behind and above the house pine and cedar trees grouped informally together into a little evergreen grove.

The house-a white clapboard colonial house, remodeled just enough to get modern comfort without taking away from its classic linesstood surrounded by a level lawn, shaded by several overhanging

"The house, is it?" exclaimed the woman. "And what, please, was you wondering?" "Oh-it's so lovely. I'd love to

"What's that you say?" a middleaged man, evidently the woman's husband, stepped briskly across the lawn behind the house, his arms filled with sweet potatoes and beets, cabbage and red raspberries from the vegetable and fruit gardens. "Whose going to live here?"

"I said I was," said Marian. "I'd advise against it." It was the woman's voice now. "Tell her why, Mike. Tell her about the

The man and woman exchanged sharp glances. "Of course, I wouldn't want to be frightening the young lady." he said, "but 'tis true. The place is haunted."

"Oh!" Marian's exclamation was half amused, half interested.

"'Tis this way. We're the care takers, Mike and me," said the woman. She looked now and then to the man, who nodded, as if in approval of the way she told her story. "And Mike runs the garden for the other house, too, which is down the road a bit. Do you know social meeting of the W. B. B. A. "Well, if it isn't Mr. Johnny, exclaimed Maggie. "Hey, Mike!" She hailed her husband dozing in a rocking chair with his pipe under one of the big elms. "Here's Mr. Johnny. Wake up, and let's us tell him about his haunted house."

"Sure, Mr. Johnny," said Mike, after greetings were over. "It's good to see you home-through college and all, aren't you? Well, this afternoon, we saved the house for you. A girl came along-pretty enough, too-who evidently wanted to buy the place. Said she was bound she was going to live here. So we saved it for you. Didn't we Maggie?"

"Sure we did. We told her it was haunted. Made a big story of ittold her of poor Mr. George's death. And she went away scared enough. We were afraid your father would sell if he got a good offer and not wait to give it to you for a wedding present, as he promised."

Maggie and Mike beamed at Johnny. And Johnny who, though they hadn't noticed it, had looked more or less solemn, beamed at

"You're a couple of old rascals," he said pleasantly. Mike and Maggie had been servants in his family as long as he could remember. "But let me tell you what you did. That young lady was the girl I'm going to marry. She just accepted me last night. I stopped to ask her on my way home. And this morning she motored over to see this house -I'd told her about Dad's promise. She doesn't live very far from here. And just now she telephoned me she couldn't marry me, after all. She was afraid she would bring me bad luck, she said."

"Oh, Mr. Johnny. I'm that sorry!" Tears were near the surface of Maggie's eyes and even Mike looked sheepish. "Only one way you can prove it," said Johnny. "You be as nice to my wife as you've always been to me. And lay the ghosts, will you?"
