There are 137 acres under cultivation and the rest of the property is woodlot. Jay, who was born on the farm, received his education in Gove school and has always been interested in agriculture. He has a grade Hoistein herd, a team of horses, and 250 laying Rhode Island Red hens, and produces mostly hay and grain from his fields. He also operates an egg and poultry route. He uses both horses and tractor for power on the farm.

History of Man's Eating Implements Is Outlined by Wayne U. Professor

Arranging a modern place-setting in the Wayne University Hos conomics laboratory is Polly Ann Coates of Grand Rapids, a student. The smaller picture shows a sketch made in the 11th century of an early fork, the two prongs of which correspond with man's thumb and forefinger.

Hands served as the principal eating tools from the Stone Age to the lith century. Then began the refinements that today are summarized in our table-etiquette books.

Dr. George Lechler, assistant professor of history at Wayne University and author of many archaeological studies, has traced the evolution of the knife, fork, and spoon. These implements are modeled for the most part after man's own hands, the most part after man's own hands, the most practical sating tools known, even though today they are not always considered the most probably being modeled with the idea that refined persons ate with only two digits, the forefinger and the thumb. The notion was just beginning to take

Both spoon and knife were known to man almost from the moment he began to use tools. The knife in was a sign of gentility. Later forks those days was, of course, nothing were made with five prongs, as are more than a flint flake, and was demany today, to represent the entire

Why Blind Elk?

Puzzling annual death of several young wild Michigan elk still is a mystery. Autopsy of latest victim, which died enroute to the laboratory, failed to indicate a new clue to conservation department game pathologist Dale Fay. The one or two animals actually recovered each year have only one thing in common . . . blindness. Two years ago salt blocks, containing scarce minerals including cobalt known to be deficient in certain northern areas, were set out for the estimated herd of 250 elk concertrated in Otsego but also in Montmorency and Cheboygan counties. Elk first were introduced in the 1920's in the Gladwin area but failed to take hold there. A few are lost in illegal deer season shooting as well, yet

Oat planting time is soon here. Remember the oat tests have shown that it is best to plant certified seed. Seed is going fast. Varieties recommended are Clinton, Eaton and Kent for this area. H. J. Huyck tells me he is one of seed southern st oats for this year. Better get them ball games.

Inspection time for plant materials is here again according to C. A. Boyer, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry at Lansing. If you have any plant materials such as n u r s e r y stock, perennials and others to sell inspection is necessary before you are able to dispose of them. Raspberries and straw-berries are also on this inspection list. If you have these to sell please write directly to C. A. Boyer, Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Plant Industry, Lansing, Mich.
