DeLuxe model introduced nation-The Michigan Conservation Department's latest predictions on total deer kill for 1953 tell us not to expect a harvest of more than 80,000 animals, including these killed during the one-day "any deer" season on December 1st. This is just about half the total taken last year.

These "extra" days included a week-end bringing out a huge army of hunters. This year several factors will work against any such kill. First, of course, there won't be as many deer. Next there will be less territory open for hunting (lower peninsula only, above M-55 as against area above M-20 last year).
