Elke's Story

examination and this was of course my nicest Christmas present. But this did not say that I was finally chosen for a scholarship. The hardest part of work began really now. All my references had to be translated in English and to be copied 3 times. I had to send in 3 copies to each of my report cards from the last two years. I had to fill out four application forms (each had four pages). I had to take a physical examination, my parents had to fill out a financial form and I had to write three copies of a personal statement. All this had to be sent in on a certain day.

Everybody I met from then until August talked to me about America and asked questions. When I would leave Hamburg, to which part in the U. S. I would go, but I didn't even know if I was going at all. I didn't dare to think that I would not be able to go for I wasn't thinking of anything else and you can imagine how disappointed I would have been.

From January till August we had always meetings, discussions or dances with A F S members to get acquainted with each other and with the A F S and its program and purpose. Maybe I should tell you a little bit about the A F S at this point.

A F S means "American Field Service". It was founded as an ambulance service in Paris at the beginning of the first world war (1914). When the second world war started in 1939 the American volunteers again, drove ambulances and carried more than 1,000,000 soldiers in Burma, Italy, France and North Africa. They learned about the value of contact with people from other nations and in 1949 started the exchange student program. In the first year there were about 17 students from 4 different countries and this year there are 78 students from 29 different countries.

Those students who came back to their European countries started the A F S summer Program which makes it possible for American students to stay in a European country for two months. I know those who stay in Germany take a trip to France after there two months.

On our meetings we heard about the AFS and began to realize the purpose of its program.

Then, in May I and my parents got the information that I was chosen for a scholarship. I read this letter about a hundred times before I believed it. I thought probably made a mistake in reading for it was written in English. You can imagine what this letter meant to me. But now the "fill-out-forms-plague" came back. And I had to get my passport and visa. To get my visa I waited in the American consulate for 6 hours. They wanted to know how often I had been in prison and why I had been pardoned etc. and the hardest part of this was to get my parent's permission. I talked to them till 12 o'clock one night, till they signed their names.

The only thing that made me enjoy a little bit less, was that only 10 out of 160 could go to the U. S. But the AFS has to find a school, a family and a sponsor for each of the students. My sponsor is the Lowell Rotary-Club and I went to take this opportunity to thank all its members for all the things they do for me. Of course there was quite a lot of things to do for us too, but it really is nothing compared with this nice and great and wonderful experience in the U. S. I studied America in Geography for one year but in two months here I learned twice as much as that. And there are so many things that you can't learn at school. I really learned to love America, especially my American family and all the American people and each day I realize how good this A F S program is and how much it can do for a better understanding between the nations.

I hope I shall have a chance to tell you about my impressions and experience in another little story. And I hope that I have interested some people in the AFS program work for the A F S after I am back for they always need more fam-

Lots of Love Won't Spoil Your Child

If you have a new baby, don't be afraid you'll spoil him—especially during the first year. He needs to be cuddled, smiled at, talked to and played with so he will know he is loved.

It's not too easy to spoil a new baby, points out Ben Ard, family life extension specialist at Michigan State University. There isn't much danger of doing so even if you pick him up for a little while almost every time he cries, he contends. When he cries, he usually needs attention of some kind such as burping or dry diapers.

Even if he needs nothing else, Ard points out, he may want cuddling or loving, and that's a real and important need, too.

When you respond to the only way a new baby has of talking to you, you are not making him difficult to control. On the contrary, you are teaching him that you are a dependable, loving parent.

And goes on to say that too much love will not ruin your child. Go ahead and pick him up when he cries. And even when he is not crying, both parents should feel free to hold and cuddle their child. Generally speaking, when your baby gets extra attention he's uncomfortable, he is perfectly willing to do without it when he feels well.

Spilling usually comes if an older baby is fussed over when he doesn't need attention. Overprotection, explains Ard, which is often mistaken for love, can spoil a baby. The parent who jumps to see what's the matter every time the baby peeps is overprotecting him. A baby fussed over like this comes to demand constant attention. You can sum it up says Ard, by saying that a child at any age must have loving people to depend on and things to do. But the older he grows, the more he's able to find them when he needs them. At six months, for example, he has to have a rattle put into his hand; at eighteen months he wants to think up his own games.

Even so, he concluded, "It seems to me to be particularly important at this time for smaller banks to make sure that, whether go-around—usually when it should be asleep."

Bank Automation To Be Studied

Many of the nation's larger banks will be using automated check handling and bookkeeping systems within the next three to five years, a conference of Michigan bankers heard recently at the University of Michigan.

Duane Watts, associate director of management advisory services for Price, Waterhouse & Co., Boston, said magnetic ink will be used to imprint information on checks processed with automated equipment, eliminating many of the manual shorting operations now necessary in check handling.

Explaining how such an automated system would work, he said: "The first bank handling each check would imprint the dollar amount, in magnetic form. Since the amount would be printed as a first step in the proof and sorting operation, all subsequent operations could, in theory at least, be done completely automatically, both by the bank first handling the check and by all others handling it, including finally the bank on which it was drawn.

"In this respect the smaller banks will have some advantage since the large proportion of their checks which clear initially through large banks will be returned with amounts imprinted and ready for fully-automatic processing."

Even so, he concluded, "It seems to me to be particularly important at this time for smaller banks to make sure that, whether go-around—usually when it should be asleep."
