ver it has been tried. Probably the key reason for the uccess of this form of government is that it is based upon tried and proven American business principles. The city council, under this plan, is analogous to the Board of Directors of a business corporation, and the city manager compares with a General manager of the organization. Similarly, this plan of city government can be compared with school organizations; the city council is the counterpart of the School Board and the city manager is equivalent to the Superintendent of Schools, ments against the council-manager form of government is that a small city cannot "afford" a manager. On the contrary, the salary of a professionally-trained manager is saved many times over in a more efficient performance of the functions of government. Some charters in smaller cities provide that the position of city manager may be combined with any other administrative office, such as the office of city clerk, treasurer, engineer, or superintendent of pub-lic works. This will further reduce the cost of a city manager by saving the salary of one or more of these other administrative employees. In a small city where the manager's supervisory duties are not likely to be heavy, this plan is a very feasible method of saving taxpayers' money. Isn't this another good reason for voting YES on this important subject?
