Really? Want to change that? It could very well be that your pay is 25 per cent greater than the amount you gave to the question above. Pay today is a package. You probably think of pay as your wage or salary given to you on payday. This type of thinking may prove a disadvantage to you. You may make a mistake when you figure the money value of your job and compare it with another job offer. American industry spends an average of $980 a year per worker in indirect pay-items which don't show in your pay envelope. When comparing job prices figure these common indirect pay devices: social security payments; unemployment insurance; bonuses; health insurance and life insurance; paid holidays; vacations; medical, cafeteria, parking, recreational and other facilities; discounts on products or services; pensions; profit sharing; stock options; thrift plans.
