Mayor Urges Action On Main Street Improvement Program, Asks Govt. Aid

Lowell Mayor Ralph Townsend urged the council to take every action possible to get the city started on a Main Street renewal program. At the mayor's request and the approval of the other council members, the city manager, Bernard Olson, was asked to investigate all the governmental units that are involved in downtown renewal programs and bring the information to the city.

The mayor outlined a plan to bring the island in the Flat River north of Main St. down behind the stores, and fill in this entire river bottom to make a huge parking and building area. He said that it appeared very possible, and financing might be found with aid from several sources.

The fill would serve as a parking area, give another way to get across the river without going on Main Street; improve fire protection in the downtown area and permit the city to install sanitary sewers in the ground.

It would also be a wonderful improvement for the recreation facilities in the city, giving the community a fine deep lake with a sandy bottom. By putting the Showboat seating on this area it could be used not only for Showboat, but for water sports programs, and other day or night time events.

It would also eliminate an eyesore in the swampy islands that now dot the area, and would eliminate the smell from the decaying vegetable matter, which would be cleaned out in building this giant landfill across the river. Channels would be left for handling spring high water.

Contact Authorities
The City Manager is expected to contact the Water Resources Commission, U. S. Army Corp. of Engineers, and others who could help in engineering and planning for this project. The mayor was optimistic that the program could do much to revive lagging Main Street improvements, by giving the property owners a shot in the arm, and encourage them to take down old buildings and construct new modern business properties.

SOIL and WATER CONSERVATION

By Your S.C.D. Directors
DONALD KLINE, S.C.S. Editor

Kent's Soil Conservation Districts Annual Meeting will be held February 12, 7:30 p. m., again at the Camp Vining 4-H Club building, Bostwick Lake on M-44. Save this date on your calendar for an interesting evening.

Last year's total moisture supply of less than 23 inches resulted in reduced crop yields on most sections of Kent's farms. Lack of rain and reduced crop acreages are responsible for unusual high prices now received for hay and straw.

Carl Abel, Cedar Springs, seed corn grower, irrigated twenty acres a night last summer from a nearby creek. Carl found there was less evaporation by application at night. The spring fed creek held its level. While his yield was below normal, the 150 acres of seed corn was saved from the drought. Abel also credits green manure cover crops and minimum tillage for less moisture loss.

Orders for tree seedlings will not be handled by your District directors this year because of planting stock available from local and nearby nurseries. Inquiries for seedlings and wild life planting stock will be directed to these nurseries. The S.C.S. continues to assist with species suggested which are adapted to different soil types and planting sites.

One of the largest acreages planted last fall was seventy thousand Red, White and Spruce used by William Schreur of Lowell. This tree plantation will be watched for spring survival. Schreur reports some rabbit damage to the young spruce this winter.

Many Kent farm woodlots should only be selective cut state Kent's Soil Conservation District directors. Too many woodlots have been clear cut better quality growing stock. Owners are urged to let red oak, white oak, maple, cherry and ash stands mature to a more profitable marketable size. Periodic cutting can be more efficient and woodlot income spread over a period of years.

What to do with less valuable quality trees. Currently low grade timber is sawed for industrial blocks and sold on the Detroit and Chicago market. Any high grade lumber is sorted out and sold to brokers.

Kent District cooperators, have found it advisable to under plant white pine in woodlots which have been harvested. The white pine weevil has been found to do a minimum of damage where there is about 30 per cent of over cover from the remaining trees. A few remaining white pine in a woods is a good indication that this pine will do well on such a site.

More border protective plantings of pine, autumn olive, wild plum, hawthorn and other smaller growing trees and shrubs are urged. These woodlot border strips help to increase the rate of timber tree growth since there is less drying out of soil in the woods.

Jack Wilson, Solon Twp. is a new District cooperator. Jack, who recently purchased a farm and who works off the farm, asked the S.C.S. how he can best use his land. The farm will be soil mapped to determine land use capabilities of his different soils.

Long time farmer neighbors have also helped. This information as to crop production and use of the land over the years will also help us to land use possibilities.

Wilson's conservation plan will serve as a guide from year to year on the rebuilding and renovation of this land.

Gumperson's Law Novel Philosophy

January is a good time to think about the law of perverse opposites—or, as it is known to most laymen, Gumperson's law. It will refresh your understanding of the universe and steel you for the year ahead, a year that is not going to be any better than the last one, as you know perfectly well. Why not? Gumperson's law is still unreplicated.

For those of you who are unaware, Gumperson's law neatly explains a number of irritating events that might otherwise be put down to mere chance. It is Gumperson's law, for example, that caused blue blue grass to grow in the cracks of concrete sidewalks but not on your lawn.

It accounts, too, for the fact that you can throw a burnt match out the window of your car and start a forest fire while you can use two boxes of matches and a whole edition of the Sunday paper without being able to start a fire under the dry logs in your fireplace.

The law, stated simply, is that the contradictory of a welcome probability will assert itself whenever such an eventuality is likely to be most frustrating. Readers familiar with these matters will perhaps recognize another version of the law: The outcome of a given desired probability will be inverse to the degree of desirability.

A brief elucidation of the law, with details on its origin and development, is presented herewith for the benefit of the lay reader.

Dr. R. F. Gumperson, internationally famous divicist, began serious work in 1938 on a phenomenon long known to scientists but until then considered as a mere curiosity. This was the fact that the forecasting record of the weather bureau, despite its use of the most advanced equipment and highly trained personnel, was not as good as that of the Old Farmer's Almanac. After four years of research, Dr. Gumperson enunciated his now famous law and was able to make a series of predictions later confirmed by other scientific workers in the field. Some of the better known of these include the following:

That after a raise in salary you will have less money at the end of each month than you had before.

That the girl at the race track who bets according to the color of the jockey's shirt will pick more winners than the man who has studied the past performance of every horse on the program.

That children have more energy after a hard day of play than they do after a good night's sleep.

That the person who buys the most raffle tickets has the least chance of winning.

That a child can be exposed to the mumps for weeks without catching them but can catch them without exposure the day before the family goes on vacation.

That the dishwasher will break down the evening you give a dinner party for ten people.

That good parking places are always on the other side of the street.

Dr. Gumperson served as a consultant to the armed services during World War II and evolved the procedure whereby the more a recruit knew about a given subject the better chance he had of receiving an assignment involving some other subject.

There is no knowing to what further glittering heights Dr. Gumperson's genius would have led him had it now been for his untimely death in 1947. Strolling along the highway one evening, he was obeying the pedestrian rule of walking to the left facing traffic. He was struck down from behind by a Hillman-Minx driven by an English visitor hugging the left side of the road.

How To Get Along With The Little Woman

Grandville Editor, John Brewer in his column last week passed on to his readers a bit of information about married life and its problems that should be of real interest to readers in this area. Here is his advice!

"Admittedly, I'm no Ann Landers, but my qualifications on this particular problem are beyond question. I have evolved a formula that has proven itself by eighteen years of continued application, and which, if used as directed, can promote a degree of domestic tranquility (as guaranteed by the Constitution) that you never dared to hope for.

The problem: The numerous odd jobs that every woman delights in finding just as the big game starts or when the man of the house starts sneaking out the back way with golf clubs or fishing pole.

The solution comes in three parts:

1. Never have any tools. This eliminates all the odd jobs that would tend to turn your leisure time into one big maze of frustration and make you over into the handiest handyman in town.

2. Get dizzy on a ladder or any high place. This does away with washing windows, painting of retrieving the kid's toys from the roof top.

3. Develop a headache when bending over. It's great for getting out of any spade work, weed pulling, snow shoveling or other endeavors that can bring about unpleasantness in your married life.

These three simple rules, when firmly established as fact, will never get you appointed to President Kennedy's Council on Physical Fitness, but they will get you out of a lot of back breaking, time consuming chores."

Only 10% Of Ph. D.'s Are Women

Of the 10,000 Ph.D. degrees now being earned annually, only about ten per cent go to women, says Merritt Chambers, University of Michigan visiting professor of higher education.

"The percentage of women among medical students is smaller than that," he notes.

Says the U-M educator, "This may be partly due to the different biologic roles of the two sexes, but it is assuredly also largely due to social traditions and prejudices which would be better overcome and forgotten.

"We could use to very great advantage more women physicians and surgeons, more women at high levels in the other professions, more women in all the scientific fields, more women in university and college teaching.

"This will come about," Chambers prophesies. "It follows inevitably from our commitment to the optimum development of all available talents."

He notes that "only about 38 to 40 per cent of all students are women." The percentage was about that high before the second World War, and it has only recently regained that level.

"The fact is that the qualities of curiosity, industry, ingenuity, and capacity for creative thought are just about equally characteristic of women. But beyond the high school level we are educating only two women out of every five.

Chambers' comments are from his new book, "Chance and Choice in Higher Education," published by The Interstate Printers and Publishers, Inc., Danville, Illinois. The paperback book of 119 pages is priced at $2.50.

The interchange of the Ford and Lodge freeways in Detroit is one of the world's busiest highway intersections. An average of nearly 300,000 cars a day travel through the tri-level interchange.

Nearly 40 per cent of University of Michigan students are working toward graduate or advanced degrees.
