Common Snakes of Michigan

Summer is the active season for soakes in Michigan and here are the ones you're most apt to see. If you shudder at the thought of meeting up with snakes, it may ease your mind to know that Michigan has only one poisonous species—the Massasauga or swamp rattlesnake. And even this rattler, confined to the Lower Peninsula and Bois Blanc Island, is not nearly as deadly as many people think. Its poison could be fatal to a small child, but there is no authentic record of a person dying in Michigan from the bite of a native rattler. Superstitions and myths have generated many false fears about snakes and clouded the generally beneficial role these reptiles play in the "balance of nature." -Mich. Dept. of Conservation

Farmers should benefit from increased wheat allotments during 1967

1967 wheat allotment recently announced by Secretary of Agri-culture, Orville L. Freeman, should result in increased in come for Michigan wheat growers, according to Frank J. Light, Chairman of the Michigan Agricultural Stabilization & Conservation State Committee. The latest increase, amounting to 15 percent, added to the in crease announced on May gives each wheat grower a total allotment increase of about 30 percent over his 1966 allot-increase offers farmers the opportunity to plant more land to wheat where wheat production is profitable while maintaining their eligibility for program benefits. Wheat prices, even with the larger acreage, are expected to be well above support levels next year because of strong commercial demand at home, continued export expansion and large food assistance requirements. Therefore, farmers can expect increased income from increased production Light added that the increase was needed because: the form er surplus has been put to use making increased production desirable; wheat stocks are being reduced below a desirable reserve level this year; domestic and world demand continue strong and export expansion can continue if we have adequate supplies at competitive all play and no work. Progress is a funny thing. Modern machines and technology have taken the backache out of our labors. We produce more with less effort.
