One thing becomes more apparent with each passing edition ... it would be a good thing if I were twins.

This hope, I'm sure, would not be shared by some of my friends and relatives, who think that one of me is plenty if, in-

But the fact does remain that having a twin would be of particular advantage on those occasions when one is required to be in two places at the same time. This by way of introducing the fact that Friday was one of those kind of days.

Of primary interest was the pleasant task of attending the timonial to Fred Roth in honor of his long service to the township of Vergennes.

Of secondary importance was the pleasant prospect of attending the annual football clinic at the Pantlind in Grand Rapids and renewing friendships with many guys whose paths we have crossed in the business of reporting sports.

Each occasion consumed what little time was available for thought as the day wore on into evening.

The day-long snow made the trip to Grand Rapids seem much less appealing and I decided to skip it altogether. Take it easy, I cautioned myself, and do a better job on the one story.

There is no doubt that the testimonial dimer for Mr. Roth will long be remembered by the distinguished representatives who gathered to pay tribute to a faithful servant to the public.

And while there was the usual solemnity and protocol attached to such an event, it was not without its moments of levity.

The one that stands out best came during remarks by C. H. Runciman, Sr., after he had presented Mr. and Mrs. Roth with a silver tray.

But Mr. Runciman was quick to add that he meant men with long hair . . . no women!

No one, not even a twin, could have enjoyed himself more. From time to time, we will hark back to some experiences of our days in covering and publicizing sports, which occupied most

One of these is recalled by the foregoing and it concerns the time that we wished Walter Dukes was twins.

An exhibition game had been scheduled in Lansing by the Detroit Pistons, for whom Walter played at that time. The following week, the team was to play in Flint.

Walter Had Poor Memory

Walter was the first in a succession of seven-foot centers to compete in the National Basketball Association and had, in addi-tion to basketball talent, a fine mind. He had studied law and was qualified to practice in several states. But if Walter had one deficiency, it was a faulty memory.

The Pistons appeared, as scheduled, in Lansing...but Walter was nowhere to be seen. He had asked permission to drive, rather than join the club on the bus.

Several minutes before game time, a call went out to all po-agencies to be on a lookout for a seven-foot center. Where, we asked, was Walter? Visions of him pinned in wreckage along some deserted road raced through our mind. The response to our plea produced no results . . . and this, in itself, was encouraging. By now, you no doubt have guessed the end of this saga. That's right ... Walter was in Flint!

The next morning, I noticed a new gray hair.

If I had a twin, he'd be welcome to those that have been add-

Two major municipal projects were in the works in Lowell toof the City Council Monday

Switching North Hudson into a major thoroughfare, and Participation by the city in financing a lift station required for the construction of a sewage system in the Sibley-Valley Vis-ta area, north of town.

Concerning the North Hud-son street change, the council-men were advised by City Manager Bernard C. Olson of plans by the Michigan State Highway Dept. to relinquish jurisdiction on North Hudson, which under state authority is designated M-91.

This would mean, Olson said, that under a new County roads primary plan, the Kent County Road Commission would take over the strip north of Main St. and on up to Hunt St., where a short cutover stretch would be constructed and which would lead into Lincoln Lake

Olson said the cost of paving with curb and gutter, and a storm sewer line of the additional roadway would be divided, with the city and the county each paying 50 percent of the

proval of the North Hudson take-over by the county and authorized the city manager to recommend a plan for the city's participation in financing this project.

At this point City Manager Olson briefed the councilmen on a lift station installation proposed in an area bounded by Sibley St. and Valley Vista Dr.

The city manager reported that the Lowell Development Corp. planned a lift station in the area, a facility in connection with further housing development along Valley Vista Dr.

The cost to the developers, Olson said, was estimated at $22,800.

However, the city manager stated, an engineering study of the area revealed a need for an alternate lift station before additional housing projects could be considered over a wide range in the Valley Vista Drive section of town.

Olson advocated a bigger lift station, which he estimated would cost some $34,000. Lowell Development Corp. would still pay its $22,800, toward the larger lift station, while the city would assume the remaincosts, estimated at about

The city solons indicated unanimous approval of the larger lift station, and instructed the city manager to report back to them, together with a plan for the city's participation in this project.

With these city projects out of the way, the council turned to a discussion on a retirement plan for city employes.

Present was Mrs. Florence Blundy, a representative of the Municipal Employees Retirement System, a State-operated agency.

Mrs. Blundy said the state agency's retirement system offered a program of financial security to city employees which supplements Social Sewhich suppleme curity benefits.

She outlined several plans for participation by both the municipality and its employees in the state retirement system.

ager Olson present, the ambulance company proposed to sta-tion an ambulance in the immediate area, and at a figure running to about $24,000 a year, to be pro rated among communities involved. Lowell's costs was set at about $12,000. Meanwhile, Olson said, Kent County officials were continuing with a study for an eventual county-wide ambulance service. But, according to Olson, it would require at least 6 months before the county could put through the ambulance service program.

The council, however, indicated it was not in the mood to go along with the proposed ambulance service, at this time, either by a private concern or by the county.

Said Councilman Herbert "We have two cruisers, and

Among them was Guy Ford, associated in office with Mr. Roth for many years, who braved the elements on a wintry night to attend the party despite his convalescense.

An interesting sidelight to the annual Chamber of Commerce dinner was a presentation by new prexy Larry Wittenbach of color slides illustrating the dramatic face-lifting of Main Street in the past year. Well done ... and most effective.

$1,500 was the prize won by Mrs. Ha Drew of Rockford, formerly a resident of the Parnell area, when she correctly identified the landmark in a contest being run by a Grand Rapids radio station. The answer was St. Patrick's Church in Parnell; the previous landmark was the Ada covered bridge.

At Monday's city council meeting, one spectator noted that council table had been moved. Turning to Mayor Arnold Wittenbach, the spectator quipped: "How come?"

Without batting an eye the mayor replied: "Oh, there's some dirty light bulbs on the other side, see!"

This was the word of advice given by State Representative Martin D. Buth in his address last Thursday to members of the Lowell Chamber of Commerce and their guests at the annual dinner meeting.

Rep. Buth said that plans for converting five miles of M-21 from Grand Rapids to Ada to a double highway, scheduled for completion in about two years, was only the result of long hours of negotiations in the House of Representatives.

"I hope the State Highway Department and Legislators from other parts of the state will listen to our pleas," said Buth, "There is no doubt that M-21 should be converted the entire way to Lowell."

No one does anything about it except YOUR Electric Company

The electric company furnishes the "juice" by which you run your electric fans, air conditioners, refrigerators, that keep you cooler and healthier-not only in hot weather like we had this summer, but also in the cold winter months we're having now, when you use electricity in heating, lighting and other uses.

All these add up to one slogan ...
