Sale and purchase of rescue units approved

The Lowell City Council approved the sale of the 1978 Chevy rescue van for $1,300 to the Rockford Ambulance Company at the December meeting.

The money in turn will be used toward the purchase of a larger 1983 medical unit from the Rockford Ambulance Company. The cost was covered by a $10,000 grant from the Look Fund and a remaining $3,000 was provided by rescue work fund raisers.

There was also a change in order of the $5,830.57 street paving projects (Ridgeview and Valley Vista) that have been completed. The change will be to extend water and sewer service across Ridgeview. This will enable the extension of these services without breaking up the newly paved streets.

The Council accepted a bid from Kelly Holst for the purchase of approximately 20-25 cord of cut wood left from the tree trimming and cutting program just completed.

Holst, who paid $200 for the wood, will have 14 days to remove the wood from the date of award.

There appeared to be substantial agreement that came out of the meeting between City Manager David Pasquale, Dick Wendt and John Montague, president of Grand Rapids School of Bible and Music.

The lease and management of the Lowell Airport was reviewed, but GRSBM still needs time to review the text further.

One of the holdups is that GRSBM would like a 10-year lease with an extension after the lease is up. However the city charter prohibits further leasing.

The city would also like to continue to charge two cents per gallon on gas for improvements. This would be in conjunction with tie downs and hangar rentals.

An advisory board would also be formed to make recommendations for capital improvements to the city.

It was announced that Joe Nowak, city assessor, informed Pasquale on Dec. 14 that he wishes to leave this position with the city rather than complete the rest of the month.

Since the city is responsible to have an assessor complete and sign the 1988 assessment roll over the next few weeks, Al Orlyk, former assessor, was contacted and agreed to carry out the assignment.

Pasquale informed the council that the city has received a large number of applications for the heavy equipment operator position that will be vacated by Jim Gibbs after 18 years of service.

Pasquale anticipates filling the position within the next few weeks.

In other news:

It was reported that the city is in compliance on its wastewater plant and sewer rehabilitation projects according to a status report from the Army Corps of Engineers.

Two of the three planning commission seats have been filled by Tom Speerstra and Mike Blough, leaving one vacancy.

Stories that made the year memorable

January 21, 1987

Bret McManus purchases the Hollow from Gary and Donna Laux. McManus renovated the establishment to a sports motif and renamed the bar "Sneakers, The Ultimate Sports Bar."

Lowell Schools host a "Positive Parenting Seminar." It's three seminars devoted to information and discussion designed to enhance the skills needed by today's parents.

January 28, 1987

Volunteer parents and Lowell students helped kick off the state sequicentennial celebration. The parents fashioned cakes into a huge map of the state that measured approximately six feet by six feet. Students from Runciman Elementary decorated the cakes with items indigenous to certain areas.

The Lowell Area Arts Council bestowed its highest honor, the Arty, to its out-going chairman of the board of directors, Brian Doyle.

February 4, 1987

Lowell City Manager Ray Quada resigned from the post after nearly 11 years of service. Quada left the position to become vice president of operations for Wendy's and general manager of Equity Interest Inc.

1987 was a year of departure, unification, new faces, new starts and celebration for the community of Lowell.

From the death of the much loved and respected Forrest "Bucky" Buck to the rebirth of the Lowell Showboat, Lowell mourned the bad times and celebrated in the good times.

From the resignation of the former city manager Ray Quada and an end to his leadership, to the beginning leadership and new vision of the present city manager David Pasquale.

From the departure of the Gus Macker Three-on-Three Basketball Tournament to the start of Family Dollar and Family Fair.

From King Doyle being named "Person of the Year" to the sale of the Buyers Guide to Roger Brown. Lowell tucks away the memories of 1987 and awaits the memories that lie ahead in 1988.

January 7, 1986

Forrest "Bucky" Buck synonymous with the Lowell Showboat, died at the age of 79. From nearly the very first production in 1932 "Bucky" was a big part of the Lowell Showboat. Bucky not only served as historian, he was a member of the chorus, an endman, the interlocuter and a board member during many years of service.

The First Michigan Bank Corporation announced the acquisition of State Savings Bank of Lowell.

January 14, 1987

An attempt by the Lowell High School administration to bus Bushnell students to Alto is met with an uproar from parents of affected students. The pressure exerted forced administration to stay with status quo, but Superintendent Fritz Esch insists something must be done before the 1987-88 school year.

Brett Nagy puts his name in the Lowell record books by becoming only the fourth wrestler in Lowell history to win 100 matches.

PRECISION & FASHION HAIRSTYLING - For both men and women. Man's World Hairstyling. Phone 897-8102.

The first heavy snowfall of the year may have brought to a halt many of the area activities, but one activity it invited, was the construction of Lowell's very first snowman. Donna Kinsley and her two children Bobby and Heather along with the help of Rob Manszewski built a 9-10 foot high snowwoman in 2-1/2 hours as the snow fell on Dec. 15.

Students test high on MEAP test

The summary of the 1987-88 MEAP Test results in reading, math and the sciences for the Lowell School District is in and Lowell scored in the norm or higher in most categories.

In reading, the fourth grade has fluctuated within the normal range over the years, but generally indicate that 90 percent of the fourth grade students attained 75 percent or better of the reading objectives.

The seventh-grade scores continue to be strong. There were 96 percent of the seventh graders that achieved 75 percent or better of the reading objectives.

Their reading scores show that 10 percent more students scored in the fourth category than when they were in the fourth grade.

The 10th-grade reading scores are up from last year's dip. The students achieving 75 percent or more of the tested objectives numbered 86 percent.

Broken down by skill area, Lowell students continue to score well in each area.

The fourth-grade math scores fluctuate within the normal range but generally indicate that approximately 92 percent of the students attain 75 percent or more of the math objectives.

Between the fourth and seventh grades, 90 percent of the seventh graders scored in the fourth category.

A slight decline is evident over the four year period of seventh grade math achievement. Although the decline is insignificant, the administration feels the situation bears watching and reversing.

On the average, 92 percent of Lowell seventh graders achieve 75 percent or more of the math objectives.

Over the last four years the 10th grade math scores have shown a steady increase. Indicating Lowell's emphasis on remediation and re-teaching of objectives not completely mastered. Sophomores achieving 75 percent or more of the objectives totaled 83 percent.

However, the 83 percent of the 10th graders that scored in the fourth category of this year's math test, represents a nine-percent decline compared to how the same group performed on the math test when they were seventh graders, although six percent more of them scored in the fourth category as compared to when they were fourth graders.

In short, Lowell students continue to score well in all categories, with the exception of fractions, at the 10th grade level which are passed by 83 percent of the 10th grade students.

The science portion of the test was voluntarily taken by the Lowell School District at the fourth and seventh grade levels.

The test items are still under study by state curriculum people and are used only as a pilot measure.

The results show that 90 percent of the fourth graders achieved 50 percent or more of the objectives tested while 47 percent of the same group achieved 75 percent of the objectives tested.

At the seventh grade level, the same pattern is seen with 85 percent of the students achieving 50 percent or more of the objectives and only 44 percent achieving 75 percent or more of the science objectives. Again, this is typical of last year's statewide results in the test item standardization process.

Langlois quietly tends to needs of area animals and tending to the animals," Langlois said. And while being a veterinarian consumes a lot of his time, the Lowell vet spends lots of his free time with young children and students. "I'm involved with the Future Farmers of America, 4-H, and I'm an agricultural advisor for the Saranac and Lowell High Schools."

 While Langlois spends his days out on the farmlands, his partner, since February, Dick Russell tends to the needs of the house pets, such as routine vaccinations, fecal exams, annual shots and heartworms.
 "Heartworms is prevalent among dogs in the Lowell area," Langlois said. "With Lowell being near a river there are many mosquitos, which spread the ailment."
 Langlois added that with it being the holiday season people should not give pets as gifts. "I think most people know that by now. Pets can be a 15-18 year commitment, something you make for yourself not for someone else."
 But if you want to do something for your cat or dog over the holidays, having it spayed or neutered would be a responsible thing to have done if you haven't already.
 "Pet overpopulation is still a problem and having your pet spayed or neutered is recommended," Langlois said.
 Langlois is the oldest of three children from the Bruce and Mary Langlois family. He has a younger brother Joel and a younger sister named Kim.

 After spending seven years earning a degree in Doctor of Veterinary Medicine from Michigan State University, Langlois bought Jim Main's practice here in Lowell.
 "The first six months we rented out the bottom floor of his house while I had this new facility (11650 E. Fulton) built," Langlois said.
 During those seven years at MSU, Langlois married his wife, Stacy. The couple has a two-year old son named Bruce Jr.
 "Young Bruce comes into the office with me and even goes out on farm calls now and then," smiles Langlois. "I have a 24-hour on-call service. And a week ago the only three calls I got were after midnight."
 Veterinarians' equipment and technology has become more advanced and has changed quite a bit over the years.
 "We're now able to do kidney transplants on dogs, put pacemakers in a variety of animals and we're also starting to use ultrasounds," said Langlois. "Just recently, MSU, for the first time ever, put a pacemaker in a Llama."
 In just a little less than four years Langlois has taken care of a variety of wildlife animals. "I've tended to hawks, coyote, fox, beafalo and deer."

Bruce Langlois has been a Lowell veterinarian since 1984. Above, Langlois situates Kira, a Siberian Husky, on the examining table.

Reflections of Christmas Past

by: T. Speerstra

By tightly closing my eyes and remembering, I can see it so clearly. It was very, very tall, but then I was very small, and Grandma's old house had ten foot ceilings.

At the very tip-top was a homemade star. Probably whittled by one or another of us grand-kids. It was a sort of wood and tin foil version of the "Great Star" that guided the wisemen. The remainder of the tree was largely homemade as well. Ribbons and glittered pine cones and such. All someone or another's idea of what makes Christmas pretty. All very personal.

The lights, of course, were state-of-the-art. They were those big old round bulbs with the screw-in bases, the ones that were all the rage before some far seeing, wealthy bulb baron invented the twinkle light.

I can smell with my eyes closed as well. Turkey or ham, dressing, sweet potatoes, pumpkin pie, all the traditional stuff.

The old house was always crowded at that time of year but, it was a good kind of crowding. We always got to spend a lot of time playing with the cousins that we didn't see much of the rest of the year.

During the day all of us kids spent our time swinging on the barn ropes and building the bales of the old hay into towering forts. We tried not to get too filthy. In the early evening, as darkness fell, we would retreat indoors to play hide and seek in the now unused upstairs rooms of the old farm house. If forced to it, we sometimes played Chinese Checkers. Obviously some aunt or uncle's idea of "A great kid's game".

As I looked back on it now, it seems that in the succession of holiday seasons of my youth, certain things were always happening again and again. Someone was always "just staying with Grandma awhile.". The faces changed but someone was always, just moving in, or, just moving out. Someone was always pregnant, someone was always sick. Someone always had a spouse that had to work that day. Someone was always late. Someone always had a new car. It was sort of a game to see who fit which category on any given Christmas. They were all signs of a healthy, growing family.

I guess.

After the mountain of food we consumed for dinner, there was always a big rise in anticipation for us kids. Usually, if we were lucky, one or another of the neighbors would come in, sometimes a bit wobbly from an overuse of the readily available "good cheer", and put on a real show for us. Santa suit, presents, and HO-HO's-the whole show. Some of us believed but most of us only wanted to.

After Santa, came the real presents, usually a hat or scarf or mittens. Occasionally a book or a whole box of shotgun shells for an older child. Always predictable, always appreciated. They were practical gifts given with purpose and reason; but mostly given with love.

Much later, when children grew tired, card playing adults not ready for the evening to end, would advise us to go lay down in the coatroom (Grandma's giant four poster laden with outerwear.)

It was always a full and busy and tiring day. The sights, the sounds, the smells, all as vivid now as they were those many years before.

Christmas was never the hype and hoopla of today's holiday. It was anticipation. It was the celebration of a birth. It was giving selflessly. It wasn't something bought or sold, it was something given. It was warmth and feeling, caring and sharing, wishing and laughing and family and more than anything: Love. So thick you could touch it, feel it.

Grandma is gone now. The farm has been sold for years. The barn where we worked and played, long ago fell into disrepair and was flattened by a cold winter storm. The aunts and uncles are all much older now and the cousins scattered like seeds upon the wind. But they're all here with me again this year, as they are every Christmas season.

I'll close my eyes, thank you very much, and I'll go back. I'll go back to ten foot ceilings, coatrooms, laughing families, creaking barns and big old farm houses full of the smells, and sights and sounds of Christmas. I'll pass it all along to my boys as long as I remember; and I will remember always.

Merry Christmas

Louis Dudeck, elementary principal and editor of Directions for the Lowell Area Schools, and James White, curriculum director/elementary principal at Alto for Lowell Area Schools, were named the winners of the annual Michigan School Public Relations Association Communications contest.

November 4, 1987

Lowell Ledger publisher Roger Brown announced the purchase of the Lowell Buyers Guide, Inc. from its owner Elva Ayres on Oct. 30.

With the purchase, Brown discontinued the competing East Kent Shoppers Guide.

The Buyers Guide was founded by Kenneth Ayres in August of 1954. Ayres died in May of 1986, and the paper has since been published by his wife, Elva Ayres, and his son Gary.

Brown said, "Don't look for sweeping changes, because we're dealing with businesses that have been around a long time. But I think the Buyers Guide and Lowell Ledger readers will see steady improvements over the coming months and years."

Wittenbach Olds, Pontiac, and GMC announced it hired Bieri Construction to demolish its old used car building.

Sgt. Roger Kling of the Michigan State Police, at a Lowell City Council meeting, said a quick solution for west side traffic problems on the busy section of M-21 is unlikely.

Kling warned because of the upcoming winter weather, it may be next Spring before the survey is done, since the survey is always done on a clear, dry day.

November 11, 1987

Incumbents James Maatman, William Thompson and Dean Collins all regained a seat on the Lowell City Council in the city's odd-year general election.

Norman Byrne, owner of Byrne Electrical Specialists Inc. was the winner of the Lowell High School "Win the Band Contest." Byrne won a free half hour concert by the Lowell High School Marching Band in his yard or a yard of his choice within a 50-mile radius.

So Byrne had the LHS Band play for his employees at Byrne Electrical Specialists.

Mike Hinkley, owner of Hinkley Drug Store, put plans into motion to take a journey from the east to the west end of town and into the Ridgeview Plaza.

November 18, 1987

In an effort to become proactive instead of reactive to challenging problems and issues that confront the Lowell School district, the Board of Education set forth a resolution for the development of a strategic long range plan.

The plan called for citizens and staff of the school district for assistance in the study of the current and future status of programs, services and facilities of the school district and in developing a course of action for the district's future.

Charles Kiel, well-known Lowell businessman, passed away at the age of 79. He was an active member of the Lowell Rotary Club, served on the Board of Education and was involved in Lowell Showboat committees for a number of years.

Lowell High School principal and other school faculty initiated Lowell's Academic Wall of Fame. This wall provides recognition for academic excellence for students, dating back to 1964.
