According to Kent County Sheriff Department Deputy Dave Clark, it appears that a Carson City driver eastbound on Cascade Road pulled out in front of a northbound vehicle on Alden Nash Monday at approximately 11:08 a.m., causing a two-car collision.

Dennis Eckman, Lowell, was northbound on Alden Nash when apparently a car driven by Fern McGraw pulled out into his path. Eckman was unable to steer clear of contact, according to Clark.

McGraw and her passenger, Mary Churchill, Carson City, were both transported to Metropolitan Hospital by Lowell Ambulance.

McGraw was treated and released and Churchill was treated for a fractured arm and held over for further observation.

Eckman survived the collision without an injury.

Answering the accident call were Kent County's Sheriff's Department, Lowell Ambulance, and Lowell Rescue.

No citations were given out. The accident remains under investigation, according to Clark.

The Alden Nash and Cascade Road accident occurred at approximately 11:08 a.m. Monday.

Lowell merchants question tactics, treatment and attitude of code inspectors

The state code book written for zoning permits, building, electrical and plumbing codes was done with the intent of insuring the health, safety and welfare of the people whom it serves.

While the purpose of such a book has never been scrutinized, recently a group of Lowell business people questioned the approach used in enforcing such codes and the common sense used in the interpretation of the codes.

The City of Lowell pays a consultant fee to Lowell Township Services Inc., to enforce building codes and zoning permits.

"It is our tax money that is actually paying for the service," said Laura McCollum, owner along with her husband, Ron McCollum, of the Flat River Antique Mall.

Ron McCollum adds, "Yes, everybody should be to be up to code. Our concern is the tactics, treatment and attitude with which inspectors are carrying out their jobs. The job requires some tact. Feelings and understanding is needed for people trying to make a living."

Andy Sparks, office manager for Township Services Inc., and building inspector for the City of Lowell, is sensitive to the fact that in the six months he's spent with the service he has inadvertently stepped on some Lowell business people's toes. However, he added that he doesn't believe people are dissatisfied with Michigan Township Services, but instead with the job it must do.

"Because of state law requirements and local ordinances, codes are different than what people were accustomed to in the past," Sparks said. "It's my job to enforce the codes and to make a definite effort to bend a little when possible and to use common sense when interpreting the codes."

That is the point for which Sparks has come under fire by Lowell Township and some Lowell business people.

Lowell Township changed from using Michigan Township Services Inc. to Cascade Township Services because of the convenience Cascade could provide, the 30 percent increase in rates that Michigan Township Services announced, and the lack of cooperation in dealing with problems it received with Michigan Township Services. "Recently, Michigan Township Services, cont'd., pg. 18

Lowell Showboat City Knights of Columbus Hoop Classic now taking entries for August tourney

In 1988 76 teams and 280 players competed in the first Showboat City Hoop Classic. In 1989 125 teams and roughly 500 players competed in the second Showboat City Hoop Classic. The Knights of Columbus, in its first year of sponsoring the Showboat City Hoop Classic, is hoping to net an even larger field of teams and players for the 3rd Annual Showboat City Hoop Classic on Aug. 10-11-12. As was the case last year, the tournament will be played on the Bushnell playground and parking lot. The move made the 1989 tournament much more comfortable for spectators and players and it also defused any neighborhood controversy. There will be a $30 per team entry fee. The entry fee will include a T-shirt and programs for each player. The young players division teams will be asked to pay a $24 entry fee. The deadline for teams wishing to play in the tournament is July 21. The young players division is exclusively for players 11 years of age and under. Teams in this division will play on eight foot baskets and their games will be played to 15 points. The Showboat City Hoop Classic is a double elimination tournament with each team guaranteed at least two games. Teams will be placed in divisions of competitive talent. A player's talent will be evaluated on experience, height and age. Trophies will be awarded for first, second and third place. Entry forms will be printed in the Lowell Ledger. Forms can also be picked up at the Ledger office.

Sweet potatoes were unknown in Europe until Columbus found them in the West Indies and took them back with him. They have turned into one of the world's cheapest food crops.

PSYCHOLOGY

Taking your child to a baseball game can be easy to swallow, if you come prepared. Take plenty of sandwiches and snacks and a thermos of punch made with instant iced tea, pineapple juice and lime juice. That way, the call of "play ball" won't be drowned out by, "Dad, I'm thirsty."

Douglass Farm listed in the State Register of Historic Sites

The Michigan Historical Commission has recently listed the Orlin Douglass Farm of 13923 Covered Bridge Rd., in Vergennes Township, in the State Register of Historic Sites. The Douglass Farm, popularly known as the Tower-Stegetee Farm, consists of a farmhouse and three major outbuildings. The dwelling is a compound massed-plan vernacular-style frame building, presently clad in asphalt siding. While it appears to be an example of the gabled ell house type, the structure results from the combining of two separate houses. One component is an upright-and-wing type dwelling, erected ca. 1850, composed of one-and-one-half story gable-front unit and single story hip-roof wing with a recessed entry porch. The second component is a one-and-one-half story side-gabled variant of the I-house type. The unified dwelling is a straightforward vernacular expression virtually lacking in style references. The outbuildings, erected between 1850 and 1880, include a three-bay side-gabled post-and-beam English-type barn sheathed in vertical planks. It was erected from hand-hewn beams joined by wooden pegs, while the interior is unaltered and retains elements such as stalls and harness hooks. Adjacent to this barn is a smaller front-gabled outbuilding, also of post-and-beam construction, that was apparently a carriage or vehicle shop. The third adjacent outbuilding is a narrow single-story front-gabled shed that contains an original work bench and a single horse stall. It is lighted by a single six-pane window and is believed to have functioned as a harness shop. Orlin Douglass, a New York native, arrived in Michigan in 1854 and settled in the vicinity of Fallasburg, purchasing 150 acres from and becoming a neighbor of the town founder, John W. Fallas. Douglass was one of the pioneer settlers of Fallasburg and apparently erected the upright-and-wing house and the barns prior to his death in 1873. In 1894 the farm passed into the hands of the Tower-Stegetee family, who owned the property until 1972. The Steketees and Towers were active in community social and religious life, with members serving at various times as administrators and teachers of Fallasburg church Sunday schools. The Orlin Douglass Farm is an important example of a mid-to-late-nineteenth century Michigan farmstead. Although the present farmhouse is sided, it is composed of two formerly distinct dwellings that represent two important nineteenth century vernacular house types: the upright-and-wing and the I-house. Importantly, the complex also contains intact examples of mid-nineteenth century farm outbuildings, examples of which are becoming increasingly scarce. As such, the staff of the Michigan Historical Commission recommends designation at the local level of significance. The State Register was established by Act 10 of the Public Acts of 1955 to recognize historic sites in Michigan. This designation also enables the purchase and display of an official state identification marker noting the name of the site and the year of its listing. Sites with unusual historical significance may, upon application to the commission, also be deemed eligible for an informational marker.

Interest in model railroading as a hobby began after the Chicago World's Fair of 1933-34. Model railroad exhibits at the fair spurred this interest.

MYSTERY FARM?

CAN YOU IDENTIFY THIS MYSTERY FARM?

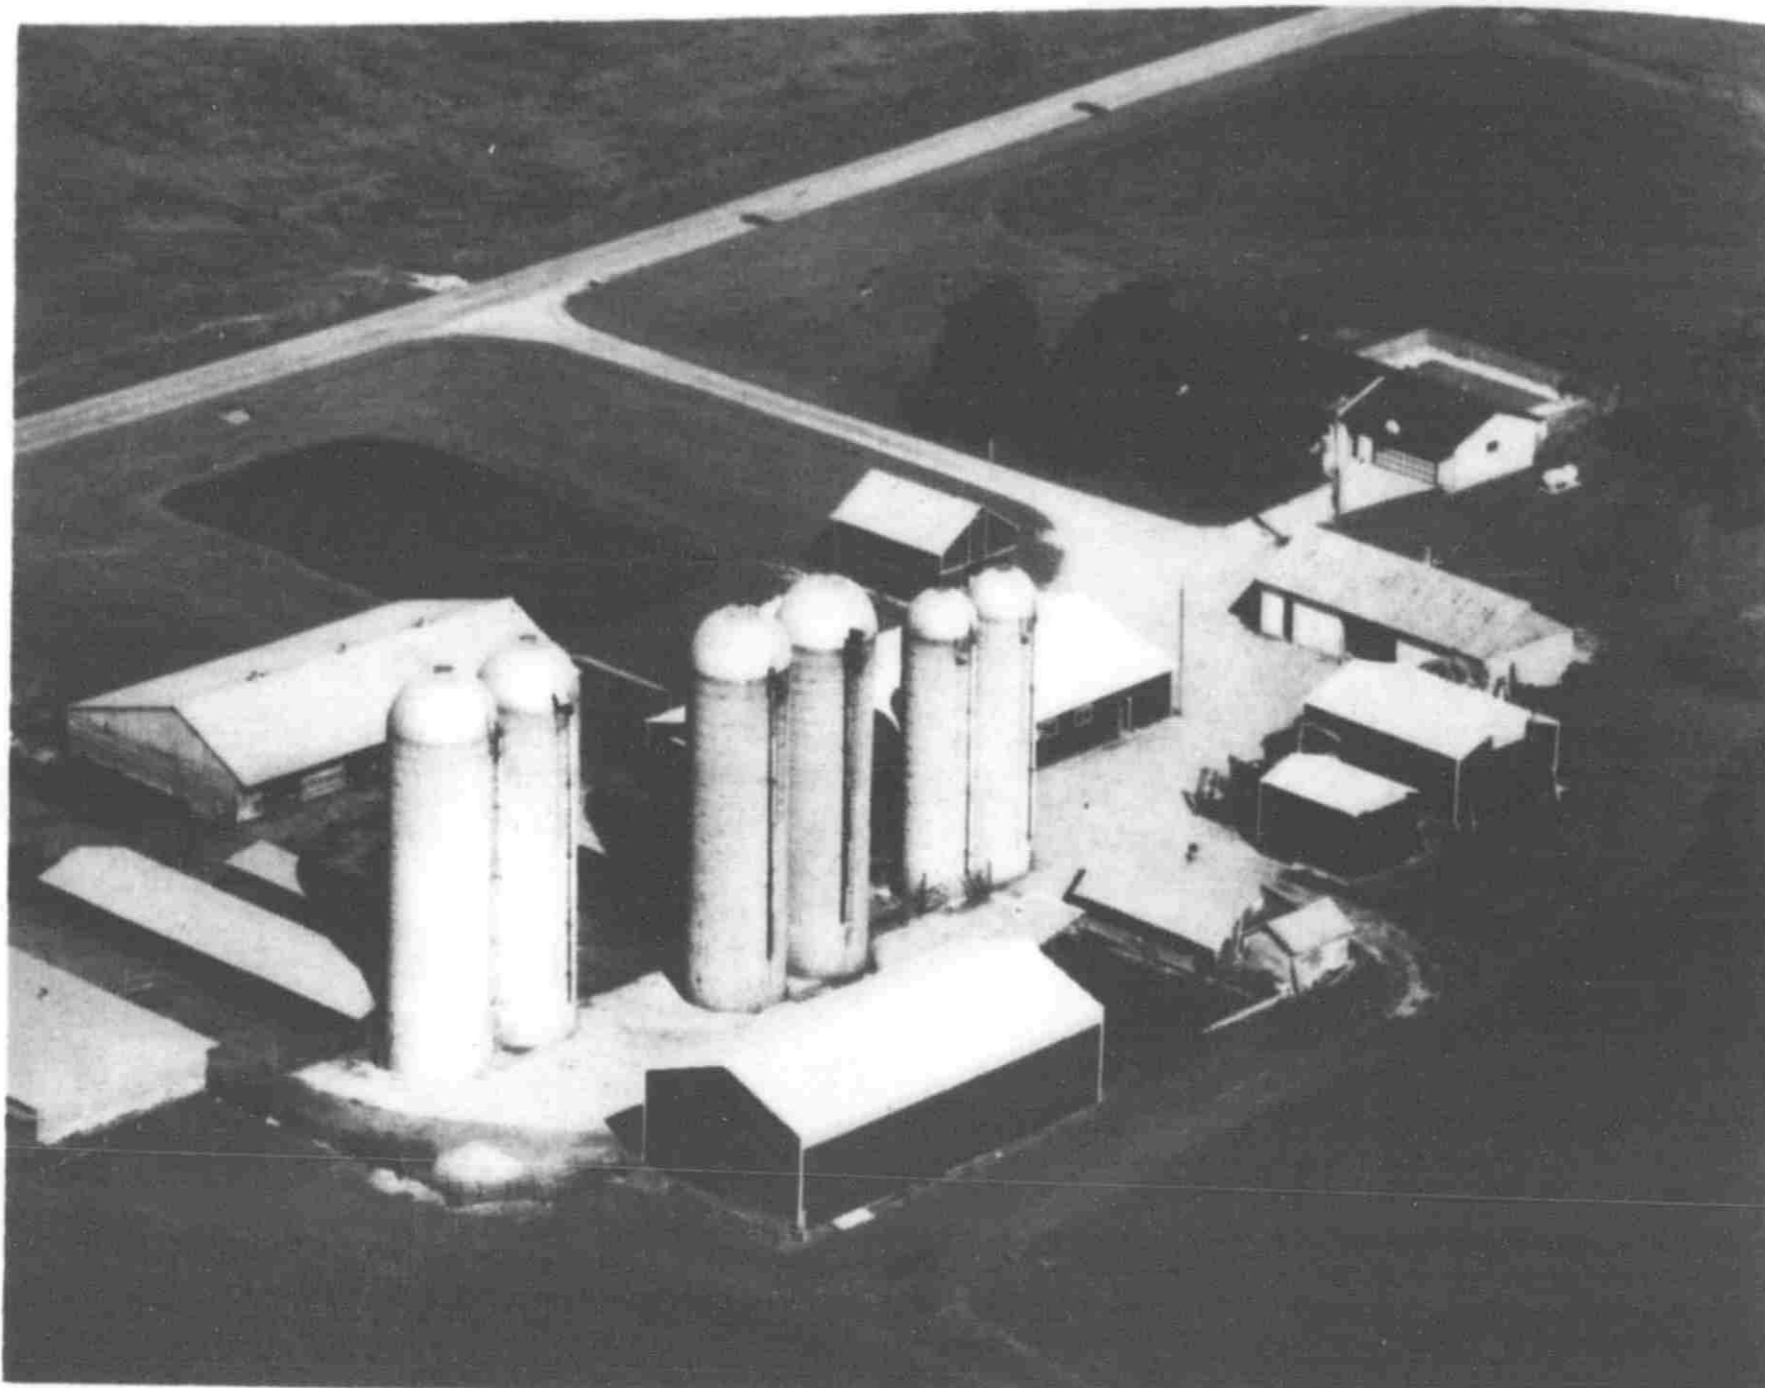

This aerial photograph was taken especially for the Lowell Ledger and is part of a series of Kent County farms.

No one knows whose farm the aerial photographer snapped, so it's up to you, our readers, to identify the mystery farm each week.

If you can identify this mystery farm...merely fill out the entry blank below with your answer, name and address and mail or drop off at the Lowell Ledger, P.O. Box 128, Lowell, MI 49331.

The name of the person correctly identifying this farm will be put in a drawing to be held on Monday, July 9, at noon for a FREE DINNER FOR TWO (excluding drinks) at Sneakers in downtown Lowell, a free car wash at Lowell Auto Wash and a free subscription to the Ledger.

The owner of each week's Mystery Farm will receive ABSOLUTELY FREE, a 4x5 color photo of the farm merely by claiming it at the Lowell Ledger office by the following Wednesday noon.

In the 13th week of the Lowell Ledger Mystery Farm, there were just two responses. Both responses correctly identified the mystery farm. Congratulations. Try your luck this week with Mystery Farm No. 14. It should be noted, that when identifying a farm, the first and last name should be used. Also, entry forms found only in the Ledger should be used! Thanks for your cooperation.

Business will never be the same at LHS - minus Christenson

It will not be business as usual at Lowell High School come Aug. 28.

Actually, business at the high school level will never be the same. That familiar face, Jeanne Christenson, who has prepared an infinite number of LHS students for college and for life after college, decided not to hit the return button on her Panasonic Typewriter for the 1990-91 school year.

"I know of many teachers that stay too long and leave not liking students," Christenson said. "I've always said I want to go out with a good feeling about the students, teaching and my co-workers."

The business teacher of 28 years at Lowell High School is doing just that, and in turn her co-workers also hold strong feelings for her, personally and professionally. (quotes)

"This doesn't sound possible, but I don't believe I've ever become tired of, or burned out on teaching in my 28 years," Christenson said. "I think all of the equipment changes over the years and the challenge of keeping up with the changes helped keep me from getting bored."

Traveling with her husband, Carl, who retired in January from Spartan Stores, will help keep Christenson from boredom during retirement. Some of that traveling will include visiting her daughter, Susan, in San Francisco.

Susan is a Lowell graduate and earned an engineering degree from the University of Michigan.

Her son, David, an East Grand Rapids graduate, is currently working on his dissertation at Hillsdale, in an effort to complete his Ph.D.

"I've always liked kids. I think I feel more comfortable around students than I do adults," Christenson says. "I understand students. I don't think they've changed a whole lot. However, their values are different. Students are more independent thinking today than students of 10 years ago."

She added that many people have problems with students because they judge kids on appearance.

Christenson, believesthat, at least in her field (business) students are easier to teach. "Most have been brought up on computers. Sometimes I think it's been harder for me than for the student."

The East Grand Rapids resident has just as strong a feeling for Lowell Schools. "Lowell is on top of everything. I believe the school improvement program has really helped," she said.

Christenson also believes joining the O-K White League in athletics has helped the school. "It has gained Lowell a lot of respect. The image people hold for Lowell from other school districts is much better than it was. Now I truly believe Lowell is one of the best school districts in the area."

Christenson admits that she will miss the students and her co-workers. "But I will not miss correcting papers. It got to a point where I thought correcting papers was my whole life.

During her retirement Christenson will travel with her husband, Carl and hopes to become reacquainted with the piano.

For now, it seems like summer vacation number 29 to Christenson, but she says, come August is when retirement will really hit home. "If I'm going to miss teaching, that's when it will happen," she said.

Until then, it's business as usual.

Jeanne Christenson served 28 years as a Lowell High School business teacher. The 1989-90 school year was her last.

WMU's Dr. Sundick and students identify skull, bone and fragments as Native Americans

The skull, bones and fragments found by city officials while working on Riverside Drive on Monday, April 16 have been identified and are believed to be those of a minimum of six early, 19th century Native Americans, according to Dr. Robert Sundick of Western Michigan University, who is a professor there and chairman of the anthropology department. Two of the individuals were adults, two were teenagers between the ages of 14 and 18 and the other two were very young children, one under the age of two and the other between two and four.

The remains were first discovered by city officials who were putting in a water main and fire hydrant. City worker Gary McCaul was the first to notice the skeletal remains in the sand that had been removed from the excavation. After the discovery of those remains Dr. Stephen Kohle, a forensic pathologist from Blodgett hospital, was called to the scene to examine them.

He determined that the bones were probably not of recent origin nor were they of legal interest and at that point he contacted Dr. Sundick to inquire whether he would also examine them. Dr. Sundick arrived on the scene Tuesday morning with four of his students, including Carol Burton from Grand Rapids, Lew Wisser, David McBride and Agnes Loeffler. They found a large hole that had been excavated with piles of sand from the excavation surrounding it. Upon examining the soil more closely they found additional skeletal materials that they quickly identified as human. Dr. Sundick says that it is not at all unusual for workmen to dig through skeletal remains without realizing what they are doing. Most long bones in the ground look very much like roots or twigs unless you really know what you are looking for. It is generally a skull that indicates to workmen that skeletal remains are being disturbed and in this case it was a skull that Gary McCaul first noticed.

Dr. Sundick and his crew then sifted some of the already excavated soil through screens they had brought with them and recovered additional bones, beads, bells, pot fragments, wood and nails. The latter two objects probably formed part of a coffin. Dr. Sundick said the materials were then transported to his laboratory in Kalamazoo where they were cleaned, sorted and identified. The identification of skeletal remains in a case like this is somewhat of a jigsaw puzzle. Every bone must be identified and placed into age categories. An attempt must be made to see which bones go with each person and then from that, a minimum number of individuals can be calculated. One of the adult individuals consists of only a single bone from the second finger of the hand.

Dr. Sundick and his students are still studying those remains to try to determine with greater certainty the time of burial and the origins of the individuals. The professor has said that the remains are those of native Americans based primarily on the structure of their teeth and secondarily on the artifacts found with them. For the time being those remains will stay in Kalamazoo while Sundick completes his analysis of them.
