Opinions varied among local officials on Proposal "C"

To hear Lowell Township Supervisor John Timpson and Lowell Superintendent Fritz Esch comment on what Proposal "C" (Cut and Cap) is and isn't, a person might think they are on the same side of the ledger.

"Cut and Cap is not an answer to school financing," Timpson said. "It is an effort to reduce property taxes. It will put a tight squeeze on our legislatures to address the school financing issue which has been skirted for years."

Esch agreed that Proposal "C" does not address the issue of school re-financing.

But don't be fooled that's where the similarities between the two officials end.

Esch, as do most other school officials in the State of Michigan, does not believe the State can afford to reimburse schools for the revenues they will lose as a result of reduced property taxes. "It's not just school officials. The Senate Fiscal Agency says the state can't afford to do it," Esch explains.

Senate Majority Leader Dick Posthumus says that simply isn't true. "That is just being used as a "red herring."

Timpson said he believes the State will, and should be commended for its effort in reducing property taxes. "Ask our township treasurer about the abuse she takes when people come in to pay their taxes," Timpson said.

The Lowell Township Supervisor says if the Proposal is passed it will spread the school financing burden out to include more than just property owners."

Posthumus agrees with Timpson. "Not only that, but Proposal C will also help create jobs and economic development."

So what exactly will proposal "C" do if passed on the Nov. 3 election?

Proposal "C" will reduce school operating taxes by 30 percent, phased in over five years (10 percent in 1993; 15 percent in '94; 20 percent in '95; 25 percent in '96; and 30 percent in '97). The plan will not reduce school operating millage rates.

Proposal "C" will cap, or limit, annual property assessment increases to three percent a year or the rate of inflation, whichever is less, until the property is sold. The value.

of the new improvements will be added to the capped assess-

The Constitution will require the State to reimburse school districts for all dollars lost through the cut portion of the proposal.

Douglas B. Roberts, State Treasurer writes that while providing relief, this plan also provides the means to maintain our school funding levels. Phased in over five years, Cut and Cap reimbursement to school districts will require that one-half of the historic growth in state revenues be used to offset the property tax reduction.

"Even if there were reimbursements made by the State. there is no guarantee that the State wouldn't change its state aid formula as it has done," Esch said. "Schools are having to educate more students this year, using the same dollars generated last year with fewer students."

Schools are not the only units concerned with the affect Proposal "C" will have. So are the city governmental units.

"I'm concerned about the the reimbursement. increased cost to run local govemments. The State says it's sources. going to make up for reducing operating taxes, but how?," Headlee the State is required to the schools." to give back a share to the get. That share is made up states with the highest prop-from sales, income and single business tax."

Pasquale's concern is that the monies to reimburse the school will be taken from state shared revenues which cities depend on.

If that happens Lowell's City Manager says additional mills will have to be asked for and/or cuts will have to be made in City services.

"There are no freebies. The money has to come from somewhere. Proposal "C" is not the solution," Pasquale said. He says there needs to be a more balanced, equitable approach in property and sales

So where will the money come from? Posthumus explains that there are three ways in which the state can fund the reimbursement to the schools.

1. Cut other areas of state government. "I still believe we haven't cut all the fat out of state government," Posthumus said.

2. Use half of the growth in government each year. On an average there is a five percent increase in growth. Posthumus says half of that would fund

3. Raise other revenue

"I believe that a combination of raising other revenue Lowell City Manager Dave sources and the annual growth Pasquale said. "Through the will fund the reimbursement

Lowell Assistant Superinlocalities, which makes up a tendent, Gary Kempsays, cursignificant portion of our bud-rently Michigan is one of the erty tax and one of the lowest when it comes to sales tax. "We all agree something needs to be done to lower property taxes. I don't believe this is the solution."

Kemp does believe that the passing of Proposal "C" removes more of the State's school financing burden and places more of the burden on the local schools and city govemments.

"The State wants better employees with better thinking skills, but they want the schools to do this with less money," Esch said.

Lowell Schools stands to lose about $10.3 million dollars over five years. Grand Rapids stands to lose $95 million if the proposal is passed. Kemp said schools will still lose money even if the cuts are replaced.

The State is convinced that "Cut and Cap" is the appropriate policy to address taxpayers' concerns about the property tax system.

Schools and city governments are not convinced it won't heighten their concerns about financing.

If school and city officials are correct, the financial burden will remain with the taxpayer, maybe not in the form of property taxes, but taxes nonetheless.

Posthumus calls Proposal "C" the single most important policy that will be addressed in the State.

School officials agree, but not for the same reasons.

As promised, here's the wrap up to my antique biplane trip to the national Stearman fly-in at Galesburg, Illinois. At least, I think I can limp the old crate back home in one more column.

With my carburetor fixed following my one day layover in Joliet, Illinois, I took off Saturday morning at about 11:00. The two hour flight from Joliet to Galesburg follows the Illinois River and is very picturesque. I'd try to describe it, but to be honest with you, I didn't pay much attention to the scenery. I was concentrating on the sound of the engine and listening for any little cough or sputter. When I did look at the scenery, I was sizing it up for emergency landing sites. A good writer would describe the river for its beauty, power, endless quest for the sea, etc. I look at the same landscape and describe a bean field for its length, direction into the wind and whether or not it's cluttered with trees and power lines at the approach end. Funny how an engine failure changes your outlook on

I arrived at Galesburg with no engine problems, not even a cough. I used the word, arrived, instead of landed, because my landing (landings, if you count the bounces) was more of an arrival. Like everything else in life, you make your best landings when nobody is looking. But, it's especially embarassing to bounce your landing in front of about a nundred other Stearman pilots.

I consoled myself by mentally adding up the time little faux pas hadn't hurt them in the judging. Then I found out

As I was stowing the t-shirts in my baggage compartment a fellow from Chicago began asking me a bunch of questions about my plane and Stearmans in general. I told him what I knew. That took about a minute or two. He said he had been into antique cars for years and had become tired of them. He added he was learning to fly, selling his cars and eventually planned to buy a Stearman. I asked if he'd ever been up in a little brother, "Dog Food Breath," or something to that effect. Stearman. When he said he hadn't, I couldn't resist the him back to his antique cars. I loaded him in the front seat and fired the old seven cylinder radial engine up.

He liked the tour around Galesburg, but he declined to take the stick when I offered it to him. When I suggested we go up to three thousand feet and loop it a couple of times he said, "no thanks" without hesitation. I figure he belongs in an old

We headed back to the airport. As I checked for traffic I saw a group of four Stearmans in their formation flying routine heading upwind over the crowd on the west side of the airport. I figured I was well out of the way, and entered a downwind approach to the runway from the east side of the field. If you get the feeling I'm building up to something here, you're right.

About the time I throttled back at mid-field on my downwind leg, the lead airplane in the formation across the runway turned sharply, flew across the field and cut in front of me. The second airplane followed and dropped in behind me. Then came the third and the fourth airplanes. I stayed in the pattern and silently cursed them for their unorthodox flying. I landed second in what was now a five plane formation.

On the ground I found out that the, "break to landing" is part of the formation flying routine. To make matters worse, I I parked my plane with about eighty other Stearmans and discovered that the group I had accidentally joined, was from

SPRAIN

Sprains or strains are probably the most frequently encountered injuries in a family doctors office. Most of these injuries are easily treatable, resulting in complete recovery if given ample time to heal. Sprains are injuries to ligaments surrounding a joint. The most common sprains occur at the ankle and finger joints. Strains are injuries to the muscle itself

Doctors grade the severity of the sprain by the amount of damage to the affected ligament. A grade one sprain involves some stretching of the ligament but no actual tear. Usually only mild swelling and discomfort are present. In Grade II sprains there is partial tearing of the ligament with increased swelling and bruising of the overlying skin. A grade III sprain means there has been complete disruption of the ligament with resulting instability of the joint.

Your physician will determine the severity of the injury by carefully examining the area of injury. X-rays are frequently obtained to rule out the possibility of fractures. Any sprain is usually treated initially by using the time honored RICE program.

R- Rest the affected joint.

I- Use ice to the affected joints intermittently for the first 24 to 48 hours. This helps prevent swelling and pain.

C- Compression by applying an elastic wrap, splint or casting material helps protect the joint from further

E- Elevating the joint above the heart helps reduce swelling and pain

Your doctor will usually prescribe or recommend an anti-inflammatory medication to further decrease pain and swelling. After a sprain, you will want to avoid stress on the affected joint. Depending on the severity of the injury, most physicians feel that active range of motion exercises relatively soon after the injury may help reduce recovery time. The joint can be protected once you return to full activity by taping prior to strenuous physical Question: Why is it necessary to wear a retainer after the tooth straightening procedure is completed?

Answer: While teeth are being moved, they are slightly loose. When they finally arrive in their corrected positions, they are still loose. To quit here could mean that the teeth could very likely move right back into their original positions. We certainly wouldn't want that. It is, therefore, necessary to use a retainer to hold the teeth in place while the underlying connecting tissue and bone reconstitute and lock the teeth into position. Most retainers are removable and are designed to be worn during less active hours at home and during sleep.
