Changes at Honeycreek will impact Lowell's Chapter 1 program

By Thad Kraus Lowell Ledger Editor

Exploding needs and shrinking resources have united Wedgwood Christian Youth and Family Services and Honeycreek Christian Homes in order to provide better stewardship of funds.

While it is not yet official, it is a definite possibility that the 10 residents currently at the Honeycreek Christian Home facility will be moved to the Pine Rest Campus in the Kentwood School District, according to Wedgwood Christian Youth and Family Services' executive director Richard Gritter.

"The two facilities have a history of working together," Gritter said. "Last August Wedgwood was asked to take over Honeycreek under an interim management service." In December of last year, Honeycreek's foster care program was transferred to Wedgwood. On Jan. 17 of this year, other programs, including residential, were also transferred.

"The two facilities are compatible in philosophy, professional commitment and as Christian agencies," Gritter said. "This sort of thing is happening all over the state. Agencies are having a tough time keeping things going."

Honeycreek is no longer providing services. It just continues to exist as an entity.

Gritter states that it has been a long time since funding by the state has been increased. Depending on the range of services needed by the child facilities get anywhere from $13 to $175 a day per child.

"We depend a lot on financial gifts from the community to operate our $9 million budget," Gritter says. "We can provide services for these children at about 25 percent of the cost to put them pital." Gritter said Wedgwood hopes to raise $1 million in gift income from the commu-

of things: one, that we are doing our job; two, Kent County Community of Mental Health is doing its job; and three, kids and adolescents can better be served in homes closer to their communities," Gritter explained.

The two facilities working as one allows them to operate more efficiently and enables "I think that says a couple them to stretch the thinning dollars.

Gritters says a decision on what option to use will be made by the end of the sum-

If students are removed from the Honeycreek campus, the facility would then be open to and for church operations and possibly housing for the elderly. "Those are just some of the options being considered," Gritter said.

A decision to relocate the students to Pine Rest is not a reflection on Lowell Schools, the executive director said. "Just the opposite, Lowell Schools have been outstand-

Concerns raised about rezoning proposal

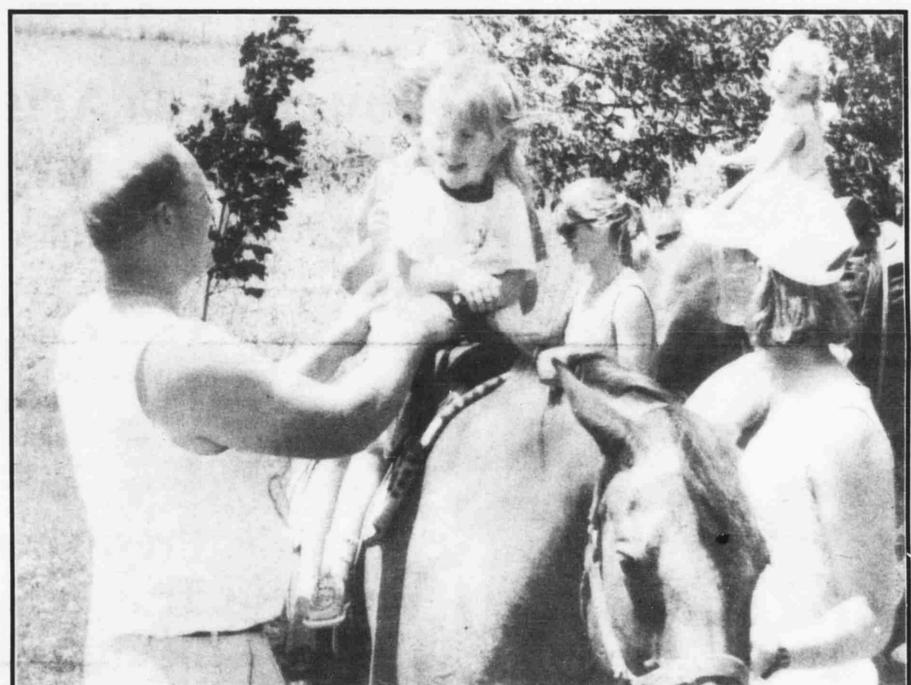

by Marc Popiolek Contributing Writer

Lowell and Vergennes Township citizens bonded together at a public hearing last week in an effort to defeat a re-zoning proposal by Thomas Karp.

Karp asked Lowell Township's Planning Commission to re-zone approximately 74 acres of land along Cumberland and Foreman from Residential one (R1) to Residential two (R2).

The main difference between R1 and R2 is the acreage needed to build a house. The re-zoning to R2 would reduce the minimum acreage needed to build a house on the site from two acres to 40,000 square feet. The reduction allows Karp to build more units on the site. Currently the plans call for 44 units with public water to be

My husband has always had a talent for finding money. As he gets out of the car in the parking lot, or as he walks down the street, his eyes seem to be drawn to the pennies, nickles, and dimes laving on the ground. He has been so successful in finding small change that I, too, have begun watching for it while I walk about. One day I mentioned this to him.

"Yes, but you have to keep looking down to find money, he pointed out. Then I thought: How true! And when you are continually looking down, you miss seeing the beauty around you.

That reminded me of people who are too concerned about trying to accumulate wealth. Money is useful. It

That incident stemmed from a training exercise my vellow lab, Thor and I went through when he was a pup. He chewed the phone cord off the wall, and when I rubbed his nose in the remnants, we discovered the low voltage carrier current in the bared wires gave him a little jolt on his wet nose. So, back to the goat. I was invited to a close friend's 40th birthday party last Friday. Typical of my highly organized life-style, I walked across the street to the card and gift shop at about 1:00 to buy, what else, a card and gift. I found a pretty good card, but I couldn't get turned on by the gifts available I guess you'd have to know this character, and I do mean character, to understand why a goofy hat, t-shirt or mug just wasn't appropriate. My creative juices went into puree speed heaven. Just what I was looking for! in the blender of my mind.

Viewpoint

thinking, "old, old, old . . . 40 is old . . . what's old? Old this . old that . . . what's synonymous with old?" By the time I got across the street I'd come up with "old goat," and had my mind made up to get him a goat. Not just any goat. It had to be a smelly, raggedy, old billy goat. Not a nanny. Not a kid. It had to be a rank old billy goat, or nothing. I got on the phone.

One phone call led to another, and another, and another until I'd made about 30 calls. My employees were hooting on me, "You'll never have a goat by tonight!" Undaunted, I dug in my heels and proclaimed, "Wanna bet?" Nobody said a word. They'd seen me in action before. When it comes to a practical joke or a prank, I'm unstoppable. If I could only be words. When he finally regained his composure, he said so excited about work, I'd own Time magazine by now.

Finally, at about 4:00, I hit paydirt. The owner of the feed store called, and said that a fella who's name he'd given me earlier, was there buying feed. I hadn't been able to reach him on the phone earlier. The guy said he had a billy goat he'd sell. The goat guy came over to the shop, described the goat as a four year old billy with caramel and black coloring. "Does he really stink," I asked? The guy said, "Yeah, he really stinks!" "Sold," I said, and gave him fifty bucks on the spot.

I went home, changed clothes, got the company truck and headed for the goat farm. The goat was almost perfect. He was apygmy goat, a little bigger than my big lab. I'd have preferred a big old standard size goat, but this guy would do on short notice. He had a big beard, looked kinda' old, and stunk to high

Back in town, we got him ready for the party. Another As I left the card shop my brain was running double-time friend had bought the birthday boy a t-shirt that said, "40 isn't usually this sexy." We put it on the goat. We tied a big balloon from his collar that said, "Older than dirt!" We then stuck a bow on him and hung a sign around his neck that said, Randy's Old Goat." The goat was now the ultimate "Party Animal!"

> The party was a huge affair. There must have been at least a hundred people scattered around the patio and backyard. All eyes were on the goat as I led him up to the festivities. Pretty soon I heard a murmur go through the crowd. "What's that smell? Oh boy, that goat sure stinks, etc!" The birthday boy finally got up the courage to see what was up, and I handed him the baler twine leash. "Happy birthday, you old goat," I said!

It was the first time I'd ever seen this guy at a loss for something like, "Okay, where did you borrow the goat?" "Borrow," I replied, "I bought him, and I'm giving him to you! Happy birthday!" He knows me well, and knew I meant it. He was at a loss for words again. I had scored a direct hit!

As you might guess, there's more to this story. For instance, what does one do with a gift goat? Of course watching him solve that dilemma was half the fun in giving it to him. So, next week's column will be something of a care and operating guide for gift goats. Until then, "good bahhhhhye."

is conjunctivitis. The conjunctiva is a thin transparent covering over the eye and the inside of the eyelids. Symptoms of conjunctivitis include redness, itching, increased tearing, and discharge. Sometimes the eyelids will feel gritty or the patient may feel as if something is in the eye. Often the eyelids may be stuck together with thick mucous upon awakening. Pink eye is usually self limited, lasting 5-10 days. One or both eyes may become involved.

Your doctor will usually examine the eyes to rule out a more serious condition. Other diseases, which can affect the eye, resulting in similar symptoms, include allergic conjunctivitis, a foreign body imbedded in the conjunctiva, and a more serious infection of the cornea and iris. A subconjunctual hemorrhage is a condition that occurs when a small blood vessel ruptures in the white of the eye leading to Pink eye is a common infection of the covering of the eye a red discoloration that lasts for 1-2 weeks. Spreading can be controlled by practicing good hygiene wash the hands frequently, try not to rub your eyes, wash away any discharge with a disposable facial tissue, don't share wash cloths, or towels with other family members. If you have conjunctivitis you should avoid use of contact lenses until the infection has completely resolved.

Your physician will often prescribe antibiotic drops to be instilled in the eyes for several days. You should use the drops until the infection completely clears. In small children it may be helpful to have the child lie supine with the eyes slightly closed while an adult then places one or two drops in the corner of the eve - have the child gradually open the eyes prior to moving, allowing the medication to painlessly reach the

"MICHIGAN WINS WITH IMPROVED JOB PROVIDER CLIMATE"

In the last two years, Michigan broke with the "business as usual" approach to government. We were the only state in the entire country that cut taxes, increased state aid to education, and wiped out a huge budget deficit by being fiscally responsible. This has sent a message to job providers that Michigan has a hospitable job creation climate.

Unemployment is down and companies are adding production and hiring back workers who were previously laid off.

A great example of this is the announcement last week that General Motors is bringing 1,000 jobs back to Michigan from

LEGAL EASE

With Jonathan J. David

DEAR JONATHAN: After my mother died, my father made out a new will leaving his estate to me and my sister in equal shares. About a year later, my father remarried. Last month my father died of a heart attack. Although he never made out a new will after he remarried, my sister and I were prepared to concede part of his estate to his wife. However, at a meeting with the estate's attorney, we found out that virtually all of my father's assets were retitled into both his name and his wife's name. As a result, there is no estate to probate and the will will not be given effect. Although his estate was not huge (approximately $200,000), my sister and I were counting on our inheritance and we believe we are entitled to it. This is especially true since he was only married to his current wife for six months. Is there anything we can do?

JONATHAN SAYS: No. Assets that are jointly titled between husband and wife automatically pass to the surviving spouse and do not have to be probated. As a result, your father's will will have no impact on the disposition of those assets.

Even if your father had not placed his wife's name as a joint tenant on all of his assets, she, as a surviving spouse, would have certain rights in his estate regardless of what his will states. First of all, she would probably have the right to claim that she is an omitted spouse. As an omitted spouse, she would be entitled to receive the same share of your father's estate she would have received if he had died intestate (without making a will), which is approximately one-half of the estate. This would be true unless it appears from the will that the omission was intentional, which would be unlikely since the will was executed prior to your father's marriage to his wife. This would also be true unless your father provided for his wife by transfers outside of the will and he intended those transfers to be in lieu of any disposition under the will.

Even if your father's wife did not qualify as an omitted spouse or did not pursue her right to be deemed an omitted spouse, she would have the right to elect between certain property interests in his estate. She would have a right to elect one of the

(a) To abide by the terms of your father's will. She obviously would not make this election since she was left out of your

(b) To take half of the share that would have passed to her had your father died without a will, reduced by half of the value of all property derived from your father by any other means other

(c) To take her dower right which is her right to use during her lifetime one-third of all land owned by your father and her husband during their marriage.

Further, your father's wife might have other statutory rights such as a homestead allowance of $10,000, the right to receive certain property with a value of up to $3,500 and the right to live in your father's home for up to one year.

Therefore, as you can see, even if your father had not jointly titled all of his assets in both his and his wife's name, she would have certain rights against his estate that she could enforce regardless of what his will stated.

DEAR JONATHAN: I am interested in making a offer on a home that is for sale in a favorite neighborhood of mine. However, the listing realtor told me that the current owners of the home are leasing the property and they have given their tenants a first right of refusal to purchase the property. What does this mean and how does it impact any offer I might make JONATHAN SAYS: A first right of refusal prohibits the owners of the property from selling the property without first giving the holders of the first right of refusal the right to purchase the property upon the same terms and conditions for which the owners propose to sell the property. In other words, if you were to make an acceptable offer on the property, then the owners of the property would have to give the tenants of the property the right to purchase the property from them under the same terms and conditions as your offer.

If you decide to go forward and make an offer on the property. then you must understand that instead of being the actual purchaser of the property, you might just be acting as the catalyst for the sale of the property from the owner to the than testate (died leaving a will) or intestate succession upon LEGAL TIP: Living trusts (sometimes known as loving trusts) are being heavily promoted today in both books and seminars. Unfortunately, some of these seminars are nothing more than marketing tools to sell living trusts at a premium. Although living trusts can be very useful estate planning documents for many people, they are not appropriate for everyone. If you attend any of these seminars, do not purchase or agree to purchase a living trust at that time. Instead, you should have the trust document reviewed by an attorney. Better yet, have an attorney prepare the trust on your behalf only after you have determined with the attorney that a trust is in your best interests given your assets and overall estate planning objectives.

Just two weeks ago the Senate repealed the inheritance tax because it unfairly chips away at the nest eggs many families want to pass on to their children.

We are just beginning to see the results of our efforts but we still have a ways to go to make Michigan a better state for job creation. Now, we need to look to the future. And our efforts are paying off. Job growth in Michigan is almost three times the national average, with 117,000 jobs being created this year. The Legislature will continue to look for ways to cut government waste, improve our competitiveness and enhance the economic condition of our state.
